A new Sommers case: Barrett

By JAKE BANKY

The attorney-general's ministry has vetoed an RCMP recommendation that charges of influence-peddling be laid against Socred MLA Bill Ritchie and NDP leader Dave Barrett is outraged.

"There should have been no question of interference with the recommendations of police and the Crown counsel," Barrett said.

"If anybody thought that this issue was not that sensitive, then they are exhibiting a level of stupidity that is incredible."

The decision not to lay charges was made by Associate Deputy Attorney-General Neil McDiarmid just three days ago.

He said at the time that Ritchie had been completely cleared of allegations he attempted to use his position as a member of the B.C. Land Commission to bribe a prominent Socred in Central Fraser Valley riding to support his nomination for the last provincial election.

The bribe — according to his accuser, Henry Friesen, — was to have been the release of Friesen's land from the Agricultural Land Reserve.

Barrett drew a parallel between the Ritchie case and former premier W.A.C. Bennett's actions in the Bob Sommers case.

Sommers was finally jailed for accepting a bribe while minister of forests.

"Surely the attorney-general is conscious of the history of this province," he said.

The charges row throws doubt on the chances of Ritchie being appointed to the provincial cabinet.

He has been widely touted as the next minister of tourism.

Barrett sent a letter to the attorney-general Thursday demanding to know why, if Ritchie was cleared, no charge of public mischief is being brought against Friesen.

Attorney-General Allan Williams says he was not consulted before the decision was made but he talked to McDiarmid afterwards and concurred with it.

Asked whether the decision had saved the government some political embarassment Williams replied: "That is not a factor taken into consideration in reaching a decision and was not in this case."

He said it was simply a judgment based on McDiarmid's professional expertise.

McDiarmid said today there should be no confusion.

"It's my professional opinion, based on the evidence available, that there was not a basis for a prima facie case against Mr. Ritchie," he told reporters.

Ferries ignoring order

VANCOUVER (CP) — One month after a labor arbitration hearing ordered his reinstatement and 14 months after he was improperly fired, B.C. Ferry Corp. relief master Jerry Stalling exists on depleted savings and bank loans.

Although the ferry corporation has not appealed the arbitration decision ordering his reinstatement, it has neither payed the $30,000 judgment or rehired Stalling as ordered, union officials representing Stalling said Thursday.

After his ferry crashed into the Saltery Bay dock near Powell River last year, he was incorrectly blamed by a secret corporation inquiry whose decision was later overturned by a labor arbitration hearing.

The decision ordered his reinstatement with more than $30,000 in back pay, but so far, Stalling said Thursday, he has heard nothing from the company.

"My last cheque from them was in October (1978) and I'm not getting any unemployment now. I've got loans and I'm waiting," he said. The arbitration hearing ruled as unfounded corporation charges that he was "deceitful and therefore untrustworthy" and that he "lied about circumstance of the collision."

Quebec question 'fraud and joke'

Times News Services

The wording of the Quebec independence referendum next spring was widely condemned across Canada Thursday as unacceptable.

Prime Minister Joe Clark, campaigning in Vancouver, rejected the wording announced earlier in the day by Quebec Premier Rene Levesque and vowed a Progressive Conservative government would not negotiate sovereignty-association.

Clark said sovereignty-association is "incompatible with the idea of a federation and therefore absolutely unacceptable to the federal government."

Liberal leader Pierre Trudeau, highly popular in Quebec, told reporters in Winnipeg he fears for "the rending of the social fabric of Quebec" because the Quebec government now says it would hold a second referendum before leading the province out of Confederation.

"I always said a referendum is divisive by its very nature," Trudeau said. "It pits neighbor against neighbor, father against son."

NDP leader Ed Broadbent, also in Winnipeg, said the question offers Quebecers only two options: independence or the status quo. He said he believes in renewed federalism.

The question is "a complete fraud" that tries to "camouflage" the independence goal of the Parti Quebecois, Quebec Liberal leader Claude Ryan said Thursday.

He said the question should read: "Are you for or against the political independence of Quebec?" Those in favor could then answer a second question on whether or not they wanted to negotiate an economic association with Canada.

"You don't ask for a mandate to negotiate when your mandate to govern is just about expired," said Ryan in referring to the fact that the PQ will soon have to call a provincial election.

"What will this mandate be worth if the government is defeated three months later?"

Ryan added that the PQ is not even asking for direct approval of its sovereignty-association option.

"They are only asking for a mandate to negotiate. Before they had said it would be a mandate to realize (sovereignty) but that has been dropped."

Ryan said the wording of the question may contravene Quebec's referendum law, which makes no allowance for a preamble. Ryan said

Petro-Can share issue to start in July: PCs

OTTAWA (CP) — A Progressive Conservative government would start giving shares in Petro-Canada to the public on July 1 as part of its program to make the national oil company strong enough to compete with foreign-owned oil giants, Energy Ray Hnatyshyn said today.

The government would hand out and sell up to 70 per cent of the shares it now has in Petro-Canada to Canadian citizens and institutions, Hnatyshyn told a news conference called to elaborate on Prime Minister Clark's announcement in Vancouver Thursday.

The prime minister's election campaign announcement said the government would keep the company intact. The government would keep effective control of the company with its 30 per cent of the shares.

But there was some confusion over the issue.

In Vancouver Thursday, Clark said a Progressive Conservative government would retain effective control over Petro-Canada and even expand its mandate.

But, having made that clear in Vancouver, in Winnipeg today Clark said the government will not exercise that control.

The government would retain its one-third holding for some time to maintain the stability of the company. But the holding could well be diminished in the future.

The government could not put all the shares out for sale immediately because the stock market could not absorb that impact.

Hnatyshyn said the government's decision to give five Petro-Canada shares worth $10 each to every citizen was decided on before the defeat of the Conservative government and the calling of the Feb. 18 election.

International Trade Minister Mike Wilson said 50 per cent of the shares would be given away and the remaining 20 per cent would be offered for sale. Children born by July 1 would be eligible for their shares on their 18th birthday. No person or institution would be allowed to own more than three per cent of the shares.

He said the market value of Petro-Canada shares is about $2.5 billion while the government has invested $927 million in the Calgary-based company. The sale of 20 per cent of the shares would raise more than $500 million for Petro-Canada's budget.

The figures differ slightly from Clark's announcement. He said the goverment would

Rhodesia peace signed

LONDON (UPI) — British and Rhodesian leaders today signed a historic agreement ending a murderous guerrilla war that began seven years ago to the day and promising the African country full independence as the nation of Zimbabwe in early 1980.

British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington said the peace pact gave "new hope" to the people of white-ruled South Africa and Namibia.

Carrington told the black leaders, "In accepting this agreement, you have given the people of Rhodesia and the neighboring countries new hope for the future — that at the end of a bitter conflict lies the prospect of national reconciliation.

"If as a result of this negotiated settlement wounds so deep can be healed, Rhodesia will have given an example and new hope to people in other parts of the world — in particular in Namibia and in South Africa itself."

The bush war that took nearly 30,000 lives began Dec. 21, 1972, with a guerrilla raid on a remote Rhodesian farm.

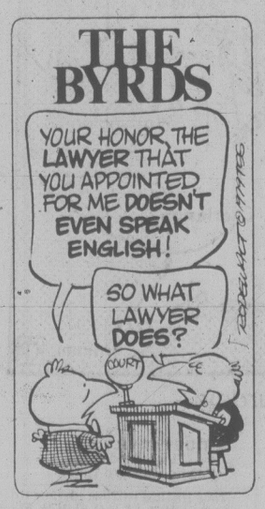

After more than three months of tough bargaining plagued by repeated crises and deadlocks, the factions signed the documents at noon (4 a.m. PST) in the lofty, chandeliered Long Gallery of London's 150-year-old Lancaster House.

Carrington signed for Britain, Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe, the hard-line nationalists who led the Patriotic Front delegation throughout, signed for their guerrilla supporters, and Prime Minister Bishop Abel Muzorewa signed for the Salisbury delegation.

Former Prime Minister Ian Smith, whose white-supremacy governmment led Rhodesia into a unilateral declaration of independence 14 years ago, did not appear and was represented by Gen. Peter Walls, commander-in-chief of Rhodesia's forces.

To underline the importance Britain attached to the occasion, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher attended.

Iranian crisis rooted in hatred of the 'infidels'

By DR. RAPHAEL PATAI

Following is the second of three articles on the seemingly incomprehensible events in Iran and the Arab world. Patai is the author of The Arab Mind and numerous other books.

The Iranian crisis in recent weeks has diverted attention from the long-simmering antagonism the Arab countries have exhibited toward the West since the end of the Second World War, and more particularly since they achieved independence from the colonial or mandatory rule of England, France and Italy.

There is an oft-quoted Arabic proverb which goes: "I and my cousins against the world, I and my brothers against my cousins, I against my brothess."

This saying, which is also current in a reverse order of its three parts, indicates how fully aware the Arabs themselves are of the propensity to conflict, which is a basic feature of their national character. The proverb itself has been current for centuries, in the course of which the identity of "the world" the Arab was ready to fight against has changed.

In most cases, the enemy was represented by another Arab country, or, in a wider context, by the non-Arab or non-Moslem "House of War," which surrounded the Arab world in Africa in the south, in Europe in the north and in Asia in the east.

For centuries, the Arabs were successful in battling "the world," until their strength was sapped by the Mongol invasions of the 14th Century. From the 15th, the Arab practically disappeared as an actor from the world stage and, as the German philosopher of history, Oswald Spengler, put it on the eve of the First World War with characteristic Teutonic bluntness, the life of the Arab "fellah peoples" consisted of nothing more than "zoological ups and downs."

From the 15th to the 18th centuries, the banner of Islam was victoriously carried by the Turks, who, however, often exhibited greater harshness towards their fellow Moslem Arabs than toward the Christian West. In any case, the 400 years of Turkish rule were for the Arab world a period of stagnation, of rigid clinging to the customs of the past, of shying away from anything new.

Part of the traditions they basked in and upheld in fond recollection was the contempt the medieval Arab conquerors had for the Christian, the infidel, West.

Then came the rudest of awakenings. The newly industrialized and modernized West knocked on the tightly shut but decaying gates of the Arab world, and not only knocked, but rammed through them. The Arabs were unable to put up more than token resistance. Napoleon's invasion of Egypt in 1798 was followed by the French conquest of Algeria in 1830, of Tunisia in 1881 and Morocco in 1912. England occupied Egypt in 1882 and in 1898 the Sudan came under de facto British control. In 1911, Italy established its rule in Libya.

What remained of the Ottoman Empire's Arab possessions was carved up after the First World War, between France and England, the former receiving mandates over Syria and Lebanon, the latter over Iraq and Palestine.

All this happened without the Arabs being so much as consulted. If they resented, as they bitterly did, being ruled by the Turks (who, while foreigners, at least were Moslems), their reaction to coming under the domination of Europeans, who were not only foreigners but also Christians, that is, "infidels," was one of hatred and rage.

It became clear to all Arabs that the new world against which the united Arab "cousins" must now fight consisted of the European powers which were their new overlords. The extension of the hatred they felt against England, France and Italy to the whole Christian West was psychologically understandable and was facilitated by the old Arab view which held that "Unbelief is one nation," meaning that all the unbelievers (i.e. Christians) constituted one single community, the historical, inevitable enemy of the Arab nation.

This, then, was the Arab world-view in theory. In practice, and this was the most painful and most shameful fact they had to face, the Arabs had to recognize that they were even more powerless to fight the West than they had been to oppose the might of the Sublime Porte.

An Ibn Saud was able to defeat other Arab tribes after the First World War and carve out a huge kingdom from the sands of Arabia, but the Arabs lacked the ability, the power, the equipment and the knowhow to fight any of their new European conquerors.

Worse than that: They even lacked the ideology which could have rallied or united the Arabs — they had no concept of nationalism until some European-trained Arab thinkers and leaders managed to introduce it into Arab consciousness.

Thus, as the Arabs had to admit to themselves, even the ideological basis for their opposition to Western domination had to be borrowed by them from the West.

Equally woeful for the Arabs in the two interwar decades was to see not only their lands and cities ruled by Christian foreigners, but also their own traditional world disintegrate under the onslaught of Western technology, bureaucracy, customs and mores.

Much of that which the West brought into the Arab lands was irresistible because its usefulness seemed so patently evident: steam engines, electricity, factories, medical services, cars and the numberless other wonders conjured up by the all-powerful jinni of the West — most typically exemplified by that faraway great and fabulous country, the United States of America.

In their eagerness to adopt these marvels, the Arabs became oblivious or neglectful of their own traditional arts and crafts, their age-sanctioned values. The educated Arabs turned their backs even to their very language, adopting instead French and English, whose knowledge became both a tool for advancement and a hallmark of the coveted accomplishment of Westernization.

Beneath the surface, however, the feelings of shame continued and the impotent rage at having become second-class citizens in their own countries, at having to admit the superiority of the West in all tangible aspects of culture, and at being helpless to stem the flooding of the old, time-honored traditional behavior pattern and values of the Christian West which they could not help seeing as immoral, wicked and anti-Moslem.

Even the hour of liberation which struck after the end of the Second World War did not help much to allay the Arab sense of frustration and the animosity toward the West engendered by it.

For one thing, with the exception of Algeria, which fought for its liberation from French rule, no Arab state engaged in more than oral skirmishes with its European overlords. Independence was not won in battle, but granted to them by the Christian West, which did not quite sit well with the age-old Arab code of honor.

For another, even after achieving political independence, the Arab states remained utterly dependent culturally on the West in general, and on their former colonial masters in particular.

Today, after more than two decade of independence, the Arab states are no nearer to cultural and linguistic autonomy than they were under British, French or Italian rule. Without a thorough knowledge of a European language, no Arab can earn a higher academic degree in any of his universities, or achieve a high position in business, industry, administration and government.

The European colonial officialdom has been replaced by Westernized Arab officials whose view of their uneducated countrymen — that is, of those who know only Arabic and in many cases are illiterate is, to put it mildly, dim. The educated Arab himself is a marginal man, with one foot in his local Arab culture and the other in European culture, and not fully at home in either.

The cultural gap between the elite and the masses so far has shown no sign of being capable of narrowing, let alone bridging.

For all this, perhaps not quite unjustifiably, the Arabs blame the West. There certainly can be little doubt that the cultural ills which beset the Arab world are, partly at least, a heritage of Western occupation and domination.

True, had it not been for the penetration of the Arab world by the West, it would have continued its centuries-old cultural stagnation which characterized it under Turkish rule, with the illiterate masses at the bottom of the social pyramid and at the top a thin educated elite, literate in Arabic and the carrier of a refined version of the same Arab culture of which the masses were the broad representatives.

Western domination has introduced and left behind a cultural dichotomy in which the masses, only now becoming generally literate in Arabic, are still the carriers of the traditional, local Arab culture, while the elite is bilingual and is oriented toward a European culture. In other words, the cultural continuum between the masses and the elite has been disrupted as a result of Westernization.

While the historical development sketched above explains the sources of the Arab resentment of the West, a full understanding of the frequent violent outbursts directed against the visible signs of Western presence in the Arab world must be sought in Arab psychology.

Numerous students of the Arab character, among them Western-trained Arab social psychologists, have observed and commented upon the emotionalism of the Arabs, their vacillating between extremes, their swinging back and forth betwen self-control and uncontrolled outbursts of temper.

The Arab historian of Iraq, Majid Khalduri, compared the emotionalism of the Baghdadi crowds to "the floods of the river Tigris, capable of destruction, but short-lived and quickly exhausted."

An American student of the Arab world, Wilfred Cantwell Smith, saw in "the new Islamic upsurge . . . a force not to solve problems but to intoxicate those who cannot longer abide the failure to solve them."

Arab history is studded with small-scale, violent and short-lived local uprisings and riotings. In recent times, since the Arab governments have commanded security and police forces well equipped with modern automatic rifles and other riot-control arms, the mobs have learned that to turn against the government is a highly dangerous venture.

Foreign institutions and premises, such as embassies, cultural centres, schools, are ready targets on which to vent their rage and frustration.

As for the governments, they in turn have long recognized that it is the better part of wisdom to let unruly and disaffected mobs vent their anger on foreign institutions and/or personnel, and to consider such outbursts as convenient safety-valves.

This explains why, when mobs storm a foreign embassy, as happened for instance, in Tripoli, Libya, recently, it takes several hours before security forces arrive on the scene and disperse the attackers. Steam has been let off, the relationship between the masses and the ruling elite has not been damaged (in fact, it even may have been improved) and the "infidels" have been given a warning which they, under any and all circumstances, amply deserve.

Tension between the masses and the elite has always been a characteristic of Arab social life and, as result of the recent alienation of the elite from traditional Arab culture, it probably has increased.

Aware of the simmering hatred of the masses which could any moment burst into violence, the rich urban Arabs would camouflage their luxurious mansions with a shabby wall and a dilapidated gate towards the street, so passers-by should not suspect what riches lay inside.

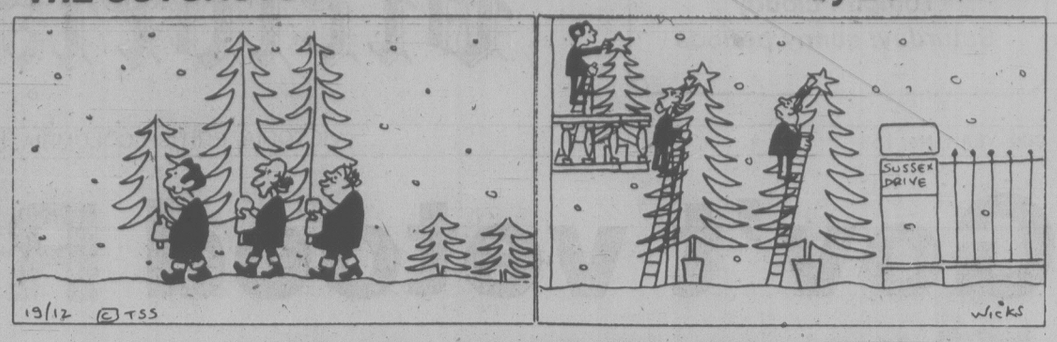

It can be foreseen that attacks on "infidel" buildings and personnel will continue to be a risk foreigners will have to face until such time as a sustained educational effort transforms the emotional and unruly Arab mobs into law-abiding citizens, or until the whole populace becomes permeated with a new self-assurance from whose vantage-point the Christian foreigner will no longer appear either hateful or enviable.

ation to be overturned, he said, it has been done.

"That's my job and my responsibility."

McDiarmid would not discuss the reasons behind his decision or the conflict with the police and Crown counsel's recommendations.

"When people look at certain evidence, quite often there is a difference of opinion as to how that evidence is used," McDiarmid said.

To the question of whether the attorney-general should have been consulted beforehand, he replied with a question: "You're saying it was a political issue and should have gone to a politician to be dealt with politically?"

Barrett said he finds it impossible to believe Williams was not consulted.

He called the decision on the Ritchie case "the most grave development" that has occurred in three months of politically damaging revelations about Social Credit.

"This is too much, simply too much to be believable," he said.

Ritchie said today he is concerned about this latest development.

"I can only report my earlier statement that at no time did I ever promise anything improper to Mr. Friesen and I am innocent of any wrongdoing."

Ritchie said, "I am now subjected to further allegations from which I am powerless to defend myself.

"This seems to me to contravene our system of justice which I have always understood to be that where a person is not charged following an investigation of his conduct he is presumed to be innocent."

Ritchie added, "I hope we are not entering an era where a man can be acquitted of wrongdoing by our system of justice and then be convicted by inference, innuendo and anonymous allegations."

B.C. authorizes $2.5M to aid flood victims

VANCOUVER (CP) — Premier Bill Bennett said Thursday the cabinet has authorized spending of $2.5 million to help British Columbia flood victims and Prime Minister Clark has promised federal aid.

Clark made the commitment after a helicopter tour of Vancouver suburbs that have been hit by heavy rainfall for more than a week, causing widespread flooding and mudslides that have destroyed several houses.

"It was very helpful to me to be able to view the situation first hand," Clark said in an interview. "Very serious problems have been caused by the heavy rains.

"Under an existing agreement, federal money will be available after the expenditure of $2.5 million by the province."

After that, the federal government will match provincial aid spending.

Bennett and Clark, accompanied by federal Environment Minister John Fraser, Port Moody Mayor Ian Young and Coquitlam Mayor Jim Tonn, flew over damage in North Vancouver as well as Port Moody.

The scheduled 45-minute helicopter tour of the Port Moody mudslides was cut to 10 minutes.

McDermott to probe union fight

Canadian Labor Congress president Dennis McDermott has appointed a trustee to look into the B.C. Ferry and Marine Workers Union, crippled by two years of internal squabbles.

Bill Smalley, B.C. regional director of organizing, will examine the internal disputes that have wracked the union since it was formed two year ago to represent 2,700 B.C. Ferry Corp. workers.

The request for a trustee came from union president Shirley Mathieson, who has been at odds with top union officials including business agent Matt Brown whom, she said, organized an unsuccessful slate at the last union convention.

Smalley will review the conflict between Mathieson supporters and other union officials. He said Thursday that a possible remedy would be a revision of sections of the union's constitution.

Two of the union's largest locals have been left without representation after Robin Holmgren, Departure Bay chairman, was dismissed by the executive, and Steve Lomax quit as Tsawwassen chairman, saying he could no longer work with Ms. Mathieson.

Holmgren was dismissed in a 12-to-9 vote by the executive, including Ms. Mathieson, for suspected involvement in a Sept. 6 unauthorized work stoppage which the provincial labor relations board is currently investigating.

The company considered the strike illegal and fired Horseshoe Bay caterer Bob Peacock and suspended Holmgren, Lloyd Thornhill and Trevor Oram for two weeks for their alleged involvement in the stoppage.

Corporation lawyer Joan McEwan told the labor relations board that Peacock, Thornhill and Holmgren knew the strike was illegal, but organized it anyway.

Union lawyer John Brewin said the company was on a fishing expedition when it issued 30 letters of temporary dismissal to workers. The company was later forced to rescind 29 of them.

Brewin said Peacock was not involved in planning the walkout and the company only assumed he was an instigator because of his involvement in a previous walkout.

The hearing continues.

Airline purchase approved

VANCOUVER (CP) — Purchase of Trans-Provincial Airlines Ltd. of Prince Rupert by the Jim Pattison Group of Vancouver has been approved by the air transport committee of the Canadian transport commission, Pattison said.

The commission has already approved Pattison's takeover of Airwest Airlines Ltd. of Vancouver and has still to process applications by Pattison for authority to buy West Coast Airlines Ltd., Pacific Coastal Ltd., Gulf Air Aviation Ltd. and Island Airlines Ltd.

Drinks, film . . death

NANAIMO (CP) — A night of drinking, a fascination with guns and excitement over a movie portrayal of Russian roulette, contributed to the death of a 23-year-old Nanaimo man earlier this month.

A five-man coroner's jury found Wednesday that Charles Allan Mee died accidentally 36 hours after shooting himself in a bizarre game patterned after the film The Deer Hunter.

The jury also absolved Mee's roommate, Peter Forberg, of blame in the shooting.

Forberg, who had spent the night of Dec. 5 drinking heavily with Mee, told the inquest that earlier in the week the pair had been to see the movie, which has frequent scenes of Russian roulette.

He said when they left the film, Mee said the characters portrayed in the movie "must have been pretty brave" to play the game. In Russian roulette the player holds a gun, loaded with one bullet, against his head and pulls the trigger, gambling that the chamber about to be fired is empty.

Forberg said Mee and he were the best of friends for about six years.

He said Mee had been known in the past to take risks after drinking — once he hung from a 16th floor balcony by one hand — but rejected suggestions that his friend had been suicidal or depressed.

Mee also was very interested in guns. He had once belonged to a pistol club in Campbell River and enjoyed target practice and hunting.

Police said Mee had four guns at home, including a prohibited U.S. M-1 carbine, a .22-calibre revolver, a .303 rifle and a Winchester rifle.

After drinking heavily, the pair returned to their apartment and Mee went into his bedroom and came out waving the revolver. He said there was one bullet in the gun.

"He stood in the centre of the room and started playing with the gun, spinning the cylinder," Forberg testified. "I didn't know whether or not to believe it."

Forberg said Mee passed him the gun, he looked at it and passed it back.

Mee put the gun to his head and pulled the trigger twice. The second time, it went off.

Two neighbors testified that after the shooting, a distraught Forberg came to their apartment for help asking them to call the police.

Costly way to fire a lawyer

VANCOUVER (CP) — Ben Ginter, the former Prince George road contractor turned brewery owner, has been ordered by the B.C. Supreme Court to pay his lawyer $2,500.

Mr. Justice Lloyd McKenzie was told that Ginter arrived at John Taylor's law office one morning in 1977 when only the firm's bookkeeper was present, went to the office of lawyer Gordon Alteman, a Taylor associate, picked up the files dealing with his cases, and walked out. He also did not pay for legal work done on the cases to that time.

Gov't urged to run freight

Two northern NDP MLAs have demanded that barge-and-truck shipping service to the northern B.C. coast be given to the B.C. Ferry Corp.

Transportation critic Don Lockstead (Mackenzie) and caucus chairman Graham Lea (Prince Rupert) said federal and provincial government blundering is to blame for a decision by CP Rail to abandon its tug, barge and truck service to the north coast effective Jan. 31.

Premier Bill Bennett noted Wednesday that the B.C. Ferry Corp. has already announced it is putting the Queen of Surrey on the northern route to supplement the service currently offered by the Queen of Prince Rupert.

"That will provide additional service for people and freight — roll-on-roll-off and other types of freight — and provide more access by water to various communities."

Lockstead said the ferry corporation should be expanded to fill the role of a domestic merchant marine to "provide a stable lifeline to our entire provincial coast, not only enabling many of the communities to stay alive but to grow and thrive."

"It would be a very important stimulus to a significant portion of the total provincial economy."

The CPR said it is dropping the service because of heavy losses.

Mix blamed in dam crack

VANCOUVER (CP) — A dam built by the Aluminum Co. of Canada at Ootsa Lake in west central B.C. cracked because the concrete mix used in its construction deteriorated, says a welder who worked on the dam.

Phil Jones also said the dam gates had improper welds and in 1977 an addition to the dam was built with an improperly installed fail-safe mechanism.

Hugh Hunt, B.C. water rights chief commissioner, said Thursday that when the dam was built in the 50s, engineers did not understand that certain concrete mixes could be eroded by alkaline water. The dam was repaired in 1977 for $3.4 million.

Les Holroyd, Alcan public relations officer, confirmed that a winch controlling the log stop guide at the dam was bolted down with inadequate bolts which pulled out during testing.

Holroyd said the bolts have been replaced with new and larger ones which will not pull out.

Jones said he wants to publicize the dam's problems because he believes it raises serious questions about Alcan's ability to build and supervise the expansion of its Kemano hydroelectric project near Kitimat on the north coast.

"There's an old wrecked gate there, the welds were shoddy and thee gate had been dropped 16 inches — what goes on?" Jones said. "And Alcan's going to build a big new one."

NOTICE

THE CORPORATION OF THE CITY OF VICTORIA

HERITAGE DESIGNATION BYLAW

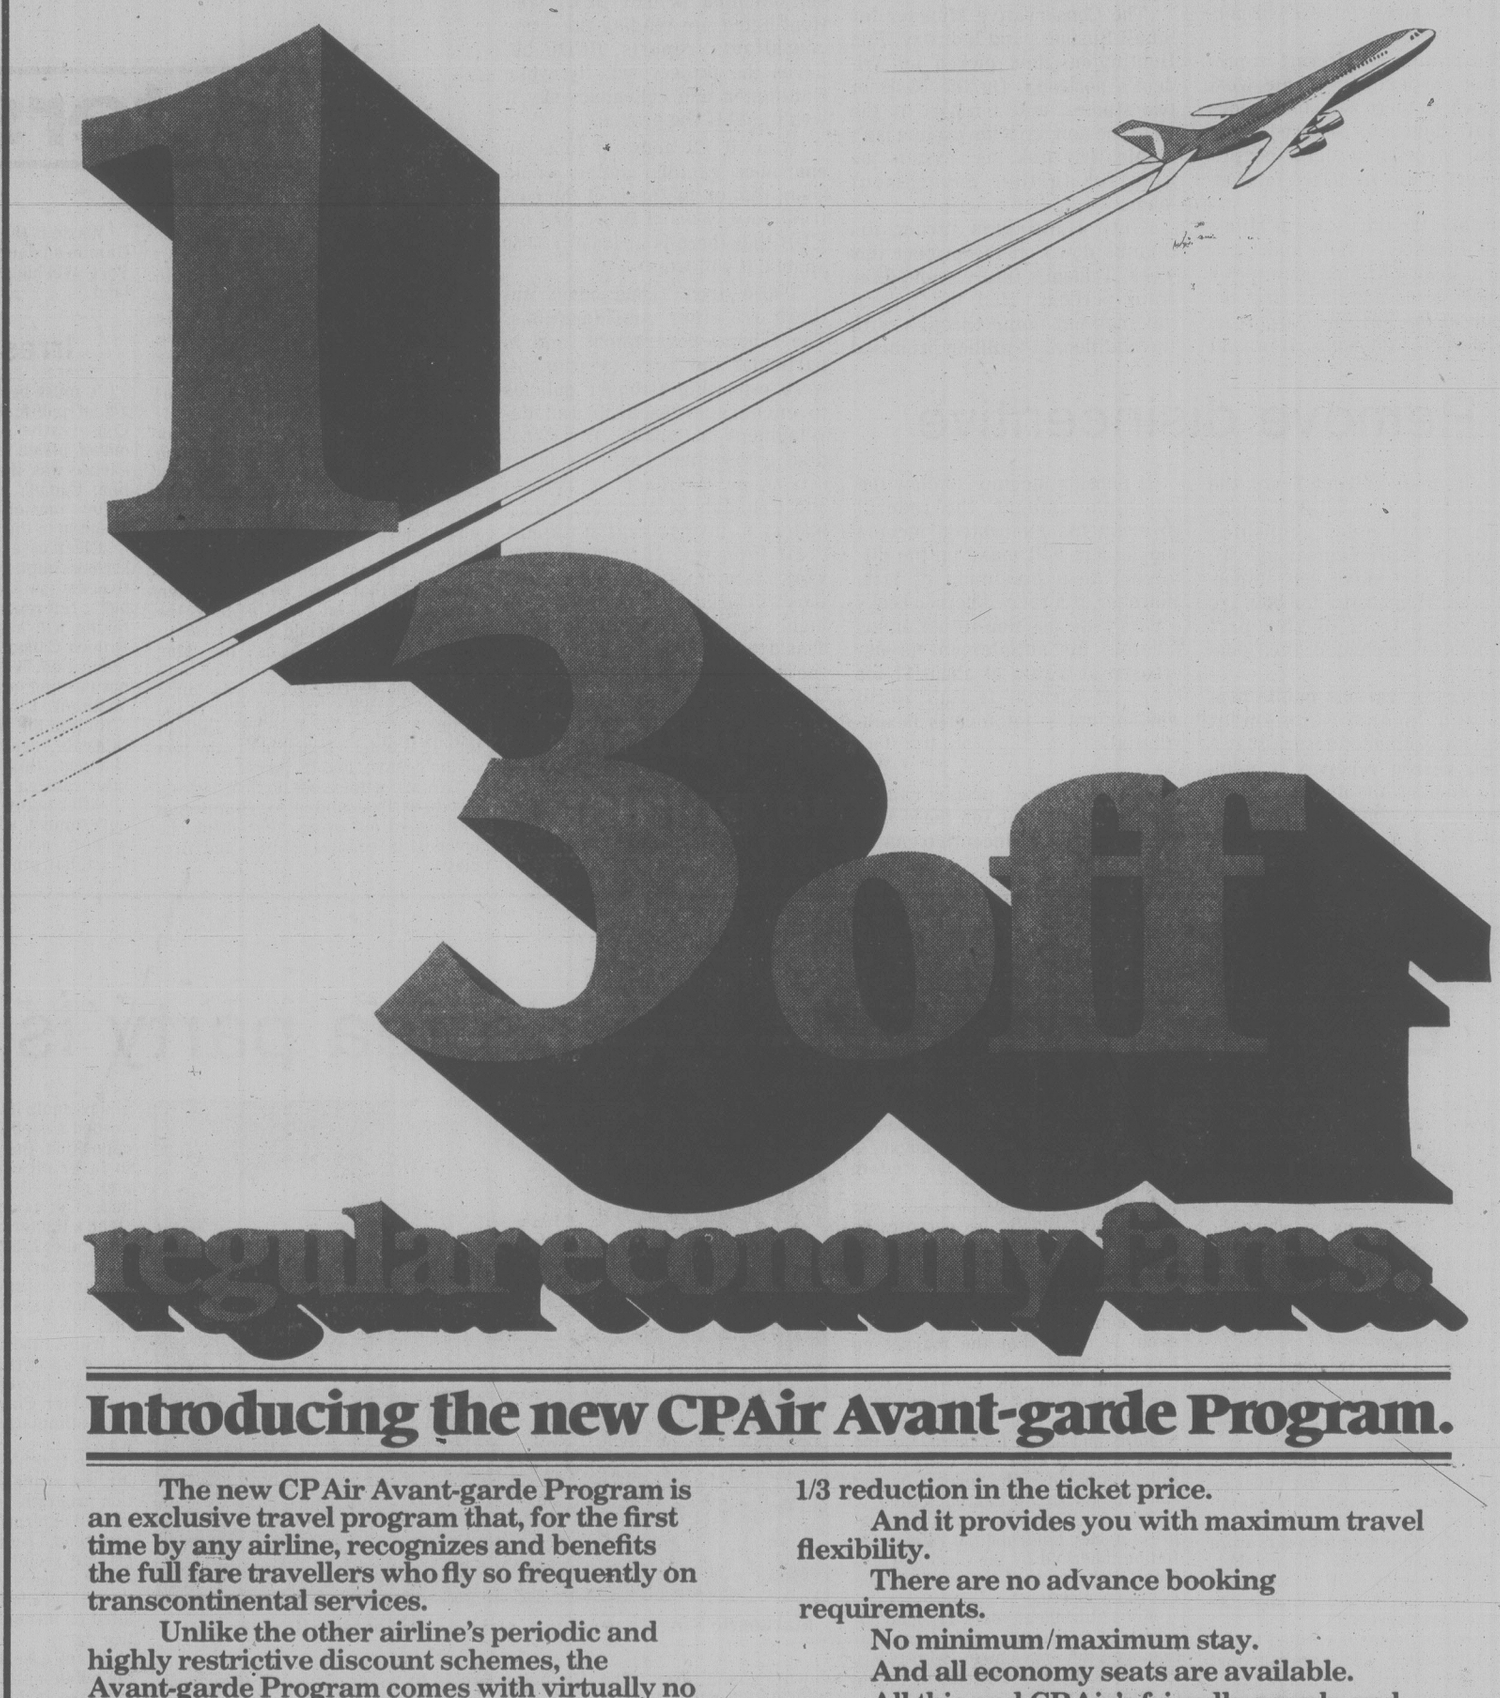

The City of Victoria intends to designate the buildings and structures situated on lands described as Lot 1032, Victoria City, and known as 1121 Pandora Avenue, pursuant to Section 11 of the Heritage Conservation Act by finally adopting "Heritage Designation Bylaw (No. 158)" at the regular meeting of council to be held at City Hall on THURSDAY, January 3, 1980 at 7:30 p.m.

The owner and occupier of the said land may object to the heritage designation by delivering written notice of the grounds of such objection to the office of the Municipal Manager not later than 24 hours before the Council meeting. If such notice has been filed, the owner and the occupier may in addition appear in person or by counsel or agent before the said Council meeting to elaborate on the grounds of objection contained in the written notice.

A CPAir first. And only on CPAir.

Introducing the new CPAir Avant-garde Program.

The new CP Air Avant-garde Program is an exclusive travel program that, for the first time by any airline, recognizes and benefits the full fare travellers who fly so frequently on transcontinental services.

Unlike the other airline's periodic and highly restrictive discount schemes, the Avant-garde Program comes with virtually no strings attached.

It offers you an honest, straight forward 1/3 reduction in the ticket price.

And it provides you with maximum travel flexibility.

There are no advance booking requirements.

No minimum/maximum stay.

And all economy seats are available.

The new CP Air Avant-garde Program.

Here's how you can take 1/3 off when you take off with CP Air.

Fly CP Air anytime during the period of Jan. 14 through Feb. 29, 1980, between any of the major Canadian cities served by CP Air. (Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, Winnipeg, Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal.)

And no matter what type of fare you travel on (excluding CP Air SkyBus), you'll receive a CP Air Avant-garde voucher worth 1/3 off your next roundtrip full fare economy flight to and from any of the above cities between March 1 through June 22, 1980.

Avant-garde vouchers are subject to government approval.

Reserve now. Call your travel agent or CP Air, 382-6111.

Stormy flight

The federal government is not playing fair ball in its dealings with Trident Aircraft Limited. Economic commitments to industry should be able to survive a change in the federal party governing the country. That hasn't happened in this case, and the Sidney-based aircraft company was put out on a limb that is now being prematurely pruned.

A few years back, Trident backers started promoting the Canadian development of an amphibian, single-engined aircraft called the Trigull. A prototype was built, and its performance satisfied both private American and Canadian backers, and the Ministry of Transport airworthiness inspectors.

But putting an aircraft in production, especially on the west coast where there is no indigenous aircraft industry, required more capital investment than the private sector was prepared to sponsor.

In 1977, the then Liberal Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Jean Chretien committed $6 million to manufacturing the Trigull at the Pat Bay Airport on the Saanich Peninsula. It wasn't until June 1978 that the same ministry under Jack Horner firmed up that commitment. He promised $4 million in a direct loan and further $2 million in a loan guarantee program.

The federal government, through the Enterprise Development Board, injected about $2 million in the project but then pulled the plug just prior to the May 22 federal election. The board apparently became worried after Trident found itself in the position of having to make many of the aircraft parts it had planned on contracting out. Before an appeal could be made there was a change in government.

The Conservative Minister for Small Business and Industry, Ron Huntington, then picked up Trident's portfolio. On the basis of two studies, and a report by the EDB, he now says the project isn't viable. The risk, he says, is too high for further government loans.

Until Huntington turned his thumbs down on the project this week, Trident's future seemed far from perilous. Had the federal government come through with the additional $4 million promised two years ago, the British Columbia Development Corporation said it would match that amount and private investors were apparently ready to chip in a further $2 million.

Trident officials say there's a market in North America and around the world for the Trigull and they'll sell enough to make good their loans. As a bonus they say that because they're forced to manufacture aircraft parts they will have the expertise and technology to do contract work for other aircraft manufacturing companies.

The odd part of Trident's present dilemma is that BCDC and Huntington are reading the same consultants' reports. BCDC believes the project will fly while Huntington and colleagues say it won't get off the ground.

What it all adds up to is an enormous gamble, and it would seem that on the basis of the contradictory views of BCDC and the EDB that there is at least a 50-50 chance it will work.

Those aren't good odds. But there are other considerations. The Liberal government, and in particular the Tory government, were espousing stronger policies to encourage research and development in Canada. The Canadian government, with its interests in de Havilland of Toronto and Canadair of Montreal, has a history of involvement in the aircraft industry. If Trident does work, as many as 200 permanent jobs will be created, many of them highly technical and well-paying. This type of industry is deemed the most suitable for lower Vancouver Island. And last but not least, the federal government has reneged on a committment.

Unless this election campaign brings a reversal of Huntingdon's position, the two Trigulls now flying could become museum pieces.

Remove disincentive

Retirement Without Tears, the special Senate committee's report which recommended abolishing mandatory retirement at age 65, neglected one small but important area. Many retired people are discouraged from seeking part time jobs to supplement their pensions.

Under the various public pension and income supplement plans, governments ensure that a retired person receives a minimum amount of money. As of January 31, a single person is entitled to $371 a month. That's not a lot.

If pension income is below the minimum amount, the federal governments guaranteed income supplement will make up the difference to a maximum of $149. However, if a retired person seeks a part time position to better his income, his supplement is decreased at a rate of about $1 for every $2 earned. It isn't worth working unless job income is substantial.

Not all retired people can or want to work. But for those that do, surely this disincentive can be removed.

Save Gambier

It seems that Gambier Island is to be destroyed, or partially so, by molybdenum mining. I hope that the people who live there or go for holidays, and the Island Trust, will succeed in preventing this desecration.

Is nothing sacred from the grasp of profit hungry industries?

Recently I saw the molybdenum mine at Endaco and I spent some time looking at the mountains and mountains of grey tailings. Long pipes take some of the tailings off into the forest and a lake is being filled up with these tailings.

The company that is promoting this mine says that it will be 5 miles from the residents, but that is only the beginning, the thin end of the wedge.

And are human beings the thing that matters? What about the animals? The destruction of wild land? That is important too, not only to the animals but to the humans, and not only to Gambier Island but to the rest of the country and its people.

We are witnessing terrible logging practises, thousands of logs burning on the logged out areas, that should be burning in peoples' stoves and fireplaces.

Irresponsible

It must be the most irresponsible act of political hay ever to vote the Conservative government of Joe Clark out of office at this time. The main excuse was the higher price of gasoline. Canada even with the increase enjoys one of the lowest prices for gasoline in the world.

Election at this time involves a serious implication: most fail to see that the low key position toward Quebec's referendum which Joe Clark is taking will assure us of keeping the French Canadians in the federal Confederation. We keep friends better by not pushing our wishes and intentions on them. Liberals have repeatedly criticised the low key approach. If the Liberals regain power and have not changed, this coming election could later cause a split in our country.

After many years we finally have a government who fully recognize the western provinces. This is why Joe Clark has problems with the "eastern boys", including Premier Bill Davis of Ontario (provincial Conservative). They want the "west" to go on subsidizing the energy they import. We should think that the elected Liberals and New Democrats from the west would have the decency to forego party politics and favor the people whom they represent.

Sad, when men of the calibre like Art Phillips with experience in business and former mayor of Vancouver followed the "pack" by stampeding against the energy proposal. The government's time to stop going deeper into debt and high interest payments is long overdue. Even though it produces "give-aways" in the budget.

No government can control the high interest rate if they inherited such a large debt as the big "monument" we have from the Trudeau era. They even governed in the prosperity years.

Could it be that the Liberals and New Democrats know that the interest rate is coming down, the austere measure will benefit us later, that Joe Clark and his boys with mistakes behind them are getting things together, or is it simply that Joe Clark is emerging as a leader who soon will be hard to contend with. — John Jorgensen, 1306 Grant Street.

BRUCE HUTCHISON

OTTAWA — The average Canadian will make little sense of national politics when its scenario seems to have been written by a peculiarly Mad Hatter who serves his guests exceedingly bitter tea.

What is really going on behind the Conservative government's supposedly tough budget, the Liberal party's sudden lunge for office on a promise of easier taxes and the New Democratic splinter's attempt to dictate the nation's high policy?

Is there any logic, rationale or long-term philosophy in all this immediate tumult? Yes, there is, though not many politicians and fewer ordinary citizens yet see it.

Despite their grinning public faces, both the national parties are undergoing a puzzled soul-search, a re-examination not only of policy but of conscience, after lurching for years from one impossible promise to another. And even the smug NDP is wondering if its once unquestioned socialist ideology can ever succeed.

The baffled voter is entitled to ask what Liberalism, Conservatism and Socialism actually mean nowadays when all human society is in a state of inchoate evolution, or revolution...

Hungry for power

Consider, first, the Liberal party because it, and it only, could precipitate a mid-winter election without yet knowing who was going to lead it. In its ravenous appetite for power it decided to gamble its own future and the nation's. But deeper forces were at work even if the Liberal caucus was too busy, ambitious and euphoric to analyse them. The immediate tactics reflected — perhaps unconsciously for the moment — a subtle transformation of the party's ancient creed.

This slow, groping process, disguised of course as changeless principles, began just 60 years ago with the arrival of Mackenzie King. He had been raised in the British creed of laissez-faire, the infallible market, the "Hidden Hand" and the harsh Darwinian economics of the Manchester School. But as a young social worker and arbitrer of industrial disputes, he concluded that unrestrained competition did not always serve and frequently damaged what he called, in his forgotten book, Industry and Humanity.

Reaching office in 1921, King used the next quarter of a century — with innumerable disgressions, advances and retreats — to build the welfare state of Canada and shelter the helpless citizen, so far as possible, from the market. And for his purposes he also built the most successful machine of politics in our history.

His three heirs, Louis St. Laurent, Lester Pearson and Pierre Elliott Trudeau, completed the job, and Trudeau even declared that the market no longer worked.

On the whole, the Liberal experiment worked to the satisfaction of the public, which eagerly received its benefits and asked for more. But the costs were so high that Canada has failed to balance the federal budget since the thrifty St. Laurent's time.

The resulting deficits and printing-press money launched the ruinous inflation inherited by the Clark government and are now the core of the February election.

Fot 11 turbulent years Trudeau dominated, expounded and often mismanaged the experiment, with twists and contradictions difficult to follow or remember.

The rich man elected on his vague dream of a Just Society and more wealth for everyone was soon appalled by its inflationary costs and announced, in 1969, a program of national austerity. It was relaxed less than a year later in fear of rising unemployment.

Throughout this troubled time Trudeau's mind had been fluctuating between the oily pragmatism of King, the theories of Maynard Keynes and the heresies of Kenneth Galbraith. A brilliant prime minister could not achieve an economic philosophy of his own.

Prices continued to rise and in the election of 1972 he lost his majority in Parliament. To save his fragile government, he depended on the NDP and paid a high legislative ransom for its support. Then, in 1974, he denounced as idiotic the conservative policy of wage-price controls, regained his majority and imposed the controls the next year.

Even then his zig-zag course was not ended. By the summer of 1978, when the budget deficit had moved up to a frightening level and the Canadian dollar had sunk, he executed a reversal of 180 degrees and, without consulting his cabinet, promised to hold down expenditures. The financial reformation came too late and, last spring, he found himself, to his amazement, leading the parliamentary opposition and hating the job.

Mackenzie King, 60 years ago, started the Liberal drift to the Left.

On its surface, this record lacks any coherence and seems only to trace the meanderings of a philosopher misplaced in politics. But the surface is deceptive.

In all his trials and errors Trudeau was steadily moving his party toward what, in the jargon of politics we call the Left — more state domination of the economy, more collectivism, more equality between regions and classes, worse inflation.

The dream of a Just Society over the distant horizon was never lost. So there was vivid symbolism, if not deliberate plan or alliance in the Liberals' decision, on the night of December 13, to join the NDP in defeating the government, risking an election on the strength of a favorable Gallup poll.

This manoeuvre was not philosophical and had nothing to do with any doctrine of Right or Left. It was the instinctive, instantaneous and automatic reaction of a party born, in its own opinion, to rule and temporarily barred from ruling by a monstrous accident.

But in subterranean channels the leftward current was still running. It would be wrong, however, to suppose that all Liberals in Parliament, or outside it, approve Trudeau's social faith. Many of them, some of the most powerful party figures, have long resisted what they regard as dangerously close to creeping socialism.

In the fiction of solidarity they have gone along with their leader, even to the point of destroying a Conservative budget though in essentials it is the kind of budget the Liberal government would have introduced if it had won the last election.

It would be quite wrong also to suppose that the whole party agrees with the inner methods of its leadership in recent years. On the contrary, there is much doubt and discontent within the parliamentary caucus and more at the neglected grass roots.

Liberals of the old school, the fundamentalists and wistful worshippers of Adam Smith, protest that Liberalism in its original doctrine has been warped and deserted by the arrogant Trudeau elite who manipulate the party from the top and ignore the nameless workers in the vineyard. Conceived at the bottom, the infant known as "participatory democracy" died, without a whimper, at birth.

To settle these disputes of doctrine, repair its mistakes, re-think its future and re-equip itself for office, the party needed a spell in the cool, clean air of opposition. But it rejected that chance in favor of a quick electoral victory and rejected as well a Conservative budget of tax increases, offering instead a lighter burden on the taxpayer. Thus the Liberal party, having attacked Clark for proposing too much economic stimulus by deficit spending, now says he is proposing too little.

While Liberalism was moving leftward, away from the market, Conservativism moved in the opposite direction after Clark's brief infatuation with stimulative Keynesian economics.

The Crosbie budget, calmly ignoring the prime minister's spring election program, was based on a revival of free enterprise, on business investment and a return of confidence in the private sector. This, of course, was sound conservative doctrine (and old-time Liberalism) which Clark had diluted or misunderstood in his apprentice days.

In any case, he had totally confused the public mind, and perhaps his own, until the budgetary reversal and his unexpected defeat. Still, the party's groping movement rightward was clear enough and distinguished it from Trudeau's leftward Liberalism.

Simultaneously, Ed Broadbent's version of Socialism was being watered down to look like mild instead of drastic reform in final abandonment of the famous Regina Manifesto.

To the bewildered, non-partisan observer, the two national parties may appear to be Tweedledum and Tweedledee, standing for the moment on their hands at the Hatter's tea party, while the NDP plays the March Hare in the background and proposes to cure inflation by reducing taxes and raising production costs.

If the voter's mind reels before this weird spectacle, let him or her ponder four stubborn facts, among others, behind the facade and make an individual choice of the unpleasant alternatives.

The first fact is that the great majority of Canadians, misrepresented by the government's critics as being in desperate straits, are highly prosperous, fat as butter, jamming the stores and expensive restaurants, piling up a huge exchange deficit in their foreign holiday travel. The poor, old and weak of an Unjust Society can only wonder at the comical alarm of the privileged.

The second fact is that no party has asked Canadians to endure any serious inconvenience, much less any real sacrifice; when half the world is hungry at the Christmas season.

The third fact is that we have been living wildly beyond our domestic and foreign means, that our opulence is founded on deficit, debt and easy money, that we must begin to restrain and then repay our borrowings at some point, not far distant, or else the nation will ultimately go broke.

The fourth fact is that for Canada and the world at large the easy times will not continue much longer when the whole international economy is strained and the military balance threatened by the OPEC cartel, the Middle East crisis and the impossible expectations of the North American, European and Japanese peoples.

Test of will

These facts record a strange, winding journey, marked by numberless philosophical detours and dead ends, to the crossroads of an unplanned and unwanted election. But on its eve we are still unsure of finding any government strong enough to mend our deranged affairs, to replenish our depleted treasury and staunch a fatal hemorrhage.

Thus, also, we have come to the central issue of the Crosbie budget. As already noted, the budget, with all its defects, broken promises and questionable economic forecasts, is more than the test of a government and an opposition. It is the test of the Canadian people's character, their will to accept and master the facts after evading them for at least a decade.

The February election will be no more than a rough, preliminary measurement of our collective wisdom, a choice between two political parties neither clear in its own mind about the future. But when one or the other forms a government it will have to decide where it is going, rightward or leftward, taking the nation with it.

Of one thing we can be absolutely sure — the clamor, slogans, promises and statistics assailing our ears in the next few weeks will mean little or nothing once the new government gets down to business and can no longer evade the facts. Luckily for us all, the mad tea party is near its end.

Tap turned off for Bird Count

It was as if The Great Birdwatcher in the Sky had suddenly chosen to smile on his flock in Victoria. Late last Friday, just when local birders were organizing parties to go in search of arks and other floatable objects, He hit the rain switch and there was drying in the land — at least temporarily.

It was a timely hit. A day later would have been too late because Saturday — the only dry day in a week — was the day for Victoria's annual Christmas Bird Count. It isn't that the day for this event is written in stone, it's just that cancelling and rescheduling it isn't easy.

Mind you, the Great Birdwatcher's smile wasn't totally benign. While He did turn off the rain, He also gave us a lot of Arctic cold — just to keep us on our toes.

So, as always in northern latitudes, weather is a big part of the post-mortem of a Christmas bird count. And this year holds true to form. While the rain held off, the winds didn't and, for the second year in a row, no count could be made out in Juan de Fuca — which probably cut a little into the sea-birds that might have made our list. And, again, while there was no rain on the count day, there was enough on the two previous days to flood all low areas and scatter the waterbirds, making counting difficult. Last, and this'll be our final excuse, the wind played hob with the landlubbers too; we've got the red eyes to prove it.

But this winter there was a touch of summer and it was provided by the birds — one in particular, a Wilson's Warbler. This little fellow, a first for a Victoria Christmas Count, should have been somewhere in northern Mexico at this time of year; instead he was in Gordon Head, near Mount Douglas.

And while we used to think of hummingbirds as summer birds, Anna's Hummingbird continues to remind us that such is not the case anymore. Nearly a dozen were seen in the area on that great day.

Turning to winter birds — the kind we can only expect to see here in winter — a Gyrfalcon heads the list. This wanderer from the Arctic has been hanging around for several days and was seen harassing the ducks on Martindale flats several times during the count.

Another Arctic visitor, this time from the islands and coasts of the Arctic seas, was the Glacous Gull. Two of these big, almost pure white gulls were seen this year — one with a couple of thousand Glaucous-winged Gulls at the Hartland Avenue dump, and the other off Esquimalt.

The Cattle Egret that had recently become comfortably established with some livestock near Blenkinsop Lake was a disappointment. It refused to appear on the count day, therefore denying us another "first" for the count.

At Quick's Bottom, the party working that area discovered that Gadwalls — small, rather drab, ducks — had suddenly chosen to favor us in numbers this year. In the past, when they were found it was usually in ones and twos. This year at least 23 of them were at the Bottom.

As for our beloved Skylarks, only 11 were seen. While that number is small, it isn't reason for concern. Only when snow covers the ground, and the birds are concentrated in favored places, do we get high counts of larks. This year they were probably scattered far and wide, enjoying the relatively salubrious winter.

Nor should the fact that no Wood Ducks were seen be reason for concern. The rains, and the flooded lowlands they created, probably cause these gorgeous little ducks to seek haunts other than their usual. Besides, it doesn't take much to hide a Wood Duck despite its colors.

The final figures for this year's count aren't in yet, but 130 species is the unofficial total. If that stands, it'll make 1979 one of our better counts. But, as much as the numbers, this year's Christmas Count will be remembered for Mike Shephard's perspicacity. Mike organized the whole thing, and more importantly, he set the day last September!

Has anyone asked the Terns?

By BESSIE F. COLLINS

SAN DIEGO — Close your eyes for a minute and visualize a scale of justice. On one side of the scale are 750 pairs of a bird called the "least tern"; on the other side (since all things are possible in the imagination) is a huge hotel, stuffed with people and a water-recreation park complete with boats of all kinds, especially those that scorch the ears with the cacophony of their engines. On this scale, which weighs heavier? There is a tug-of-values here between the federal government — which sees this 9-inch, gray-feathered, yellow-billed bird as an endangered species — and those who covet its nesting places for a hotel and water-recreation park.

What chance has the least tern against a major profit-making business deal?

The least tern is the latest victim of society's shortsightedness. Today's young people, unless they are scientists in the field of nature, may never have heard of the passenger pigeon. The last one in the United States died in a cage in 1914. There was a time when passenger pigeons, with their pinkish-gray bodies and long tail feathers, were so numerous that when they flew in swarms the sun was blotted out in their passing.

Men with guns, shooting for profit or sport, saw to their extinction.

In a remarkable book, Keith County Journal, John Hanovy Jr., a professor of life sciences at the University of Nebraska, tells of his anger and frustration when a proposed government flooding of his beloved prairie was being planned. Watching the surveyors, this gentle man finds himself screaming at them in ugly street language. Then he pleads with a sigh, "Have you asked the wrens?"

Now we in San Diego are told that if we save the least tern and stop maintenance dredging, also required by the government, Mission Bay Park will revert to its natural state — a mud flat.

A mud marsh. Teeming. Worlds within worlds in that mud. Creatures thriving in the ecological chain, depending on each other for survival. They can be betrayed only by machinery brought in to create mammoth upheavals and destruction.

To what purpose this proposed hotel, this water-recreation park? More picnic areas with more beer cans, paper plates and other debris scattered on the grass? More trnasients who trample grass, contribute more litter, zoom down on hapless pedestrians with bicycles and skateboards and roller skates?

Consider the least tern lost in the black hole of such "progress."

True, it is not as if we are losing a beautiful bird or one noted for its fine singing. It simply goes about its business of surviving and seeing to the future of other least terns. It is blissfully ignorant of blueprints and planning and the indignation and scorn heaped on government or individual "do-gooders." Its territorial "song" is instinct at work, while we intelligent creatures, imagining a scale of justice, see only the weight of "much" against "little."

Experience teaches us that there probably will be wheeling and dealing and trade-offs.

We, the small voices in the large wilderness of our present civilization, fear that the least tern may soon be a thing of the past around Mission Bay Park — and where do we and it go from here?

The writes of privacy

Katharine Whitehorn

LONDON — I'm not sure whether Barbra Streisand, who recently got a judge to order a magazine to snip out all nude pictures of her before it went on sale, or Sophia Loren, who sought a similar injunction from a French court about pictures taken with a telephoto lens, come into quite the same category as the gentlemen who, in the 19th century, felt obliged to resign from their clubs if they were "mentioned in the publick prints."

But I do know that whenever any hapless journalist gets up before an audienee (whether for money, blackmail or fear of an Aunt), the question always comes up: Why are we such rats as to pry into other people's private lives? In Sweden, we are told reproachfully, they don't do things like that; why should we do it here?

Restraining ourselves from saying that that may be why Sweden is as boring as it is, we put up what defence we can. "You like reading it — so you can't blame us for writing it," we say. Or, "lots of people don't mind nearly as much as you think" — which is true: all reporters have sat on hard kitchen chairs, listening to the family tragedy being told and retold, and felt more like therapists than journalists.

And when it comes to public figures, what right have they to privacy anyway?

If a man sells himself as president on the grounds that he scarcely ever thinks of anything but God and peanuts, and is surrounded by as cosy a cast of relatives as the Waltons, he can scarcely complain if the world sniggers a bit over his brother Billy, in the days when he was commonly as stoned as a prune. If a man deliberately sets up his image as a pater familias with rows of scrubbed, smiling children, he can hardly say the voting public has no right to know if he is hauled out of a strip club in his underwear at four in the morning.

Just as there is a ruling in law courts which says that people are free to take your character to pieces if you have made its integrity a part of your own case, so anyone who has sold the public on the nice bits of their lives can't really plead privacy when it comes to the nasty bits. Politicians, film stars, comedians, pop stars: they that live by the headline shall die by the headline.

I confess to a truculent lack of sympathy, too, for the privacy of jet-setters generally; one way or another they are living off the fat of someone else's cattle, and if the public gets a little of its own back by reading about the glossy goings-on, I can't see the harm in it, provided it's accurate (I am told that gossip columnists get half their information anyway from the friends of the beautiful people, who ring up on a Monday morning to say who their friends were in bed with over the weekend). The only exceptions, perhaps, are those where privacy overlaps with safety: I don't dig the gossip columnist who enchantingly told the world when a threatened tycoon had finally deemed it safe to take the bodyguard off his three-year-old daughter.

The thing gets trickier with people who commonly live out of the public eye altogether, and would certainly claim they weren't public property at all: high civil servants, financiers, city men, directors of companies. They would say that it was nothing to do with the public if they beat their dogs or repress their children or divorce regularly by the light of the full moon.

But I wonder. If it helps people's confidence in a company to know that, say, Arnold Weinstock works like a windmill and can be as tough with the people close to him as with the unseen workers of distant factory, isn't the reverse true too? If a director — who denounces at city dinners the idle lack of push in the British workforce — is known to go to such dinners six nights a week and spend the mornings recovering, is not that something the share-buying public would also like to know? I happen to know that Moss Evans' wife says "Moss is very good — he gives me a coat whenever I need one." Doen't that affect how well I think he will fight for the right of his female members?

The real trouble is not, I suspect, that we're told too much, but that we're never told enough. The press spotlight shines luridly for a few days on there; but most of what decides our lives goes on in secret, as it always has. Occasionally we get the name of the blonde, the time and place of feelthy assignation. But whether the man panics on motorways, is a bastard to his secretary, shades his income tax or makes shaky judgments for lack of sleep we never usually know. It is not often enough that a Chappaquiddick shows us how a man will react in a crisis, or a messy lawsuit reveals such a snake-pit of shady dealings that it almost ceases to matter who was technically guilty.

Better to dig than not to dig, I'm sure; so I suppose it is just too bad when we cut a worm in half.

LOUGHEED . . . the myth dies hard

Alberta isn't really paved with gold

By JEFF SALLOT
The Globe and Mail

EDMONTON — It's said that travel broadens one's horizons. But Marshall McLuhan was probably closer to the truth when he said we travel to confirm preconceived notions about a place. Tourists aren't interested in hearing about the undercurrent of racial tension in Hawaii because that doesn't fit the image of the island paradise. They want to grab some snapshots of hula dancers and then hit the beach.

Given this foible of human nature, Premier Peter Lougheed might want to consider closing the Travel Alberta offices and recalling all those lovely See the Rockies brochures. If there is anything Alberta doesn't need at the moment it is to perpetuate myths about the place. If the provincial government lets tourists get too close to a real, honest-to-goodness oil well or buy postcards of the Calgary Tower there'll be a lot of people returning home to regale their neighbors with tales of the filthy-rich cowboys who have more money than they know what to do with.

During the past four weeks I've criss-crossed the country twice, touching down briefly in such disparate spots as Prince Albert, Sask., and Montreal, confirming my own preconceived notions, no doubt, and talking to people about what they think of Alberta. Oh boy, is Peter Lougheed ever in trouble. There seems to be a pretty widespread view throughout Canada, but especially in Ontario, that Albertans have become wealthy as the result of gouging oil consumers and that they arrogantly flaunt their wealth.

All my stops were familiar to me from previous visits. But I feel comfortable discussing what I saw and heard in only two cities — Toronto and Ottawa — because I have lived there. It is unnerving to discover how little my old friends and former neighbors know about Alberta. What was worse was the pain of recognition when I realized that I once said many of the same things before I moved to Alberta 10 months ago.

While it's true that the Alberta economy is booming at the moment — the fastest-growing provincial economy in the country — the new wealth is really a temporary bulge along the time line. A lot of Albertans were dirt poor before the first major oil discovery in 1947 and prosperity on the Ontario scale didn't start to develop until 1974 when world oil prices took off. The provincial economy is vulnerable, first because oil is a non-renewable resource which won't last forever, and because if (some Albertans say when) there is a major breakthrough in other energy forms, such as solar power, Alberta's one major resource will lose its importance in a heavily industrialized national and international economy.

Unlike Ontario, Alberta has no significant manufacturing sector to fall back on. Alberta is a long way from markets and has no ready access to cheap transportation for manufactured goods. There are no St. Lawrence Seaways or Great Lakes ports for landlocked Albertans. But even with Alberta's current and temporary advantages, such as cheap energy costs and the lowest taxes in the country, Albertans have a long way to go before they'll enjoy the obvious affluence of their cousins in Ontario.

The most conspicuous display of consumer wealth in Canada can be seen in Toronto's Yorkville district, not in Calgary or Edmonton. The men and women are better dressed. Their more expensive cars are double-parked everywhere. They can afford to shop in the pricey boutiques and dine in the classy restaurants, pay outrageous prices to the hairdressers and the art gallery owners. The intersection of Bay and Bloor Streets is a monument to the affluence of the locals and the fashion supplement of Toronto Life is the bible. There is nothing in Alberta to compare.

If anyone thinks there has been a massive shift of corporate power to the West he can have that myth dispelled by scanning any page of the Directory of Directors. Almost anybody who is anybody in the business world has a Toronto address.

Political power, which rests as much with the public service as it does with elected politicians, is naturally enough concentrated in Ottawa. Like most other capital cities, Ottawa is a poor reflection of the country its inhabitants govern. There had been some thought that the election of Joe Clark, the boy from High River, might have brought about a change of attitude in Ottawa. But the city is just as insular as ever. Earlier this year an aide to a senior federal Liberal politician seemed utterly amazed when I told him some people would actually prefer to live in Alberta rather than Ottawa. The new crowd is a little bit more discreet these days, but little else has changed.

Ottawa bureaucrats, and journalists, are used to thinking of the West in terms of cliches. It's easier that way. And for many years westerners took great umbrage at that fact. But what westerners may not realize is that Ottawa deals with everyone that way. That's just the way the place is.

Wallace Lt.-Gov. at BCYP

Former Conservative leader Scott Wallace will be lieutenant-governor for the B.C. Youth Parliament to be held Dec. 27-31 in the legislative buildings.

Legislation proposed for this year's sitting includes an activities program for children at the Blanshard Street housing project.

The Camp Phoenix Act, if passed, will authorize the BCYP to run a summer camp at Shawnigan Lake for the children.

The BCYP is a service organization that is devoted to youth work in the province.

The legislation that is passed is financed through the sale of Youth Parliament bonds, a tax-deductible donation.

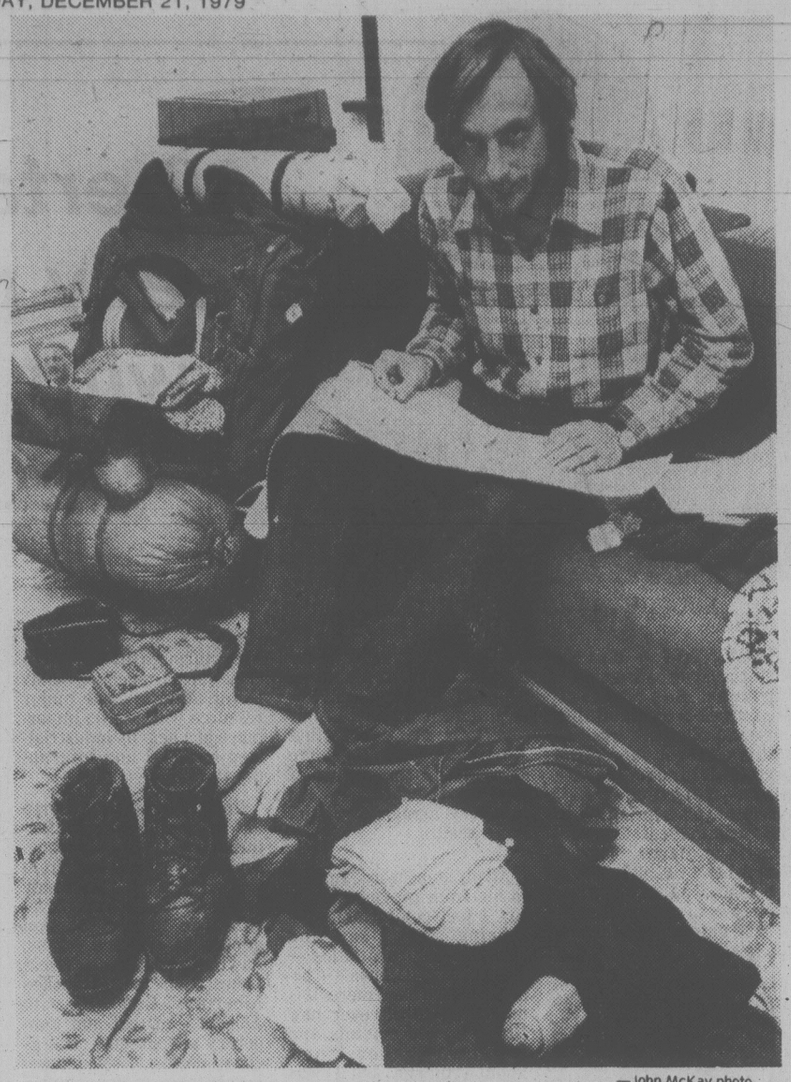

The BCYP is made up of members between the ages of 16 and 21 from every point in the province.

Kevin Wells of New Westminster is the premier for this year's session, which marks the 51st year of the organization.

Wells is in his fourth and final year in parliament and is a third-year student at the University of B.C.

Wonnacott rests tired tootsies after trans-Canada ramble

He wanted to get up and keep on walking

By DEREK SIDENIUS

When Geoff Wonnacott awoke this morning he says he felt like putting on his boots and walking again.

That's not surprising since the 28-year-old self-employed carpenter from Paris, Ont., has just completed a walk across Canada.

He left St. John's, Nfld., on May 29.

At 3 p.m. Thursday he trudged into Victoria city hall and handed Mayor Bill Tindall a postcard from Newfoundland that he has carried in his pack.

Jokingly, he told Tindall he was the Mercury Mail Co. and was delivering his own mail. No charge.

Then he went to the home of a friend, Barclay Read at 940A Queens, where he put up his feet for a well-earned rest.

He flies home Monday.

Wonnacott said he felt a little sad that the long trek is over.

"You get into a certain lifestyle and now it's over you just feel like getting up and walking."

Wonnacott said he made the trip to get to know Canada.

"I enjoyed the physical challenge but the nature of the trip was to get information about the country and the people," he said.

He kept detailed notes, took thousands of photographs, and used 675 topographical maps on which he recorded the sights and sounds along the way.

He hopes to share his intimate and pedestrian view of Canada with other Canadians.

He said he plans to put the information together into some kind of travelling exhibition if he can get some help from the federal or provincial governments.

Wonnacott said he was fortunate in having good weather most of the journey. He entered B.C. via the Crowsnest Pass in mid-November and while he encountered some snow in a few of the passes, the weather was with him until he got to Princeton. From that point on it rained every day.

He wore out the soles of his boots three times and his progress was only interrupted once, in Quebec, where he booked off sick for one day.

Carrying a 45-pound backpack, he averaged 20 miles a day and camped out 90 per cent of the time.

Wonnacott, who has made two other long-distance walks in Ontario, said he arranged with his wife, Heidi, and sister, Victoria, to drop off food — dried nuts, fruits, sausage meats — and maps and clothing at 65 postal stations across the country.

Saanich gives green light to McKenzie extension

The provincial highways ministry can go ahead with a $7 million four-lane arterial highway along residential McKenzie Avenue, Saanich council decided Thursday night after a three-hour special meeting.

Aldermen voted 6-2 in favor of the controversial McKenzie extension, planned 20 years ago to link Pat Bay and the Trans-Canada highways.

About 90 persons, including Finance Minister Hugh Curtis as Saanich MLA, showed up to protest or support the extension.

Ald. Bob Cameron asked for the special meeting because of strong opposition from residents along the house-lined route.

The highways ministry is in the middle of negotiations for 56 properties, including 32 homes, on the right-of-way.

Ten houses have already been purchased and offers made for 20 others, municipal engineer Cliff Warren said.

Ald. Howard Sturrock, former NDP deputy highways minister, said after hearing traffic statistics he is convinced the McKenzie link is an "absolute necessity."

Putting through a highway is never a popular decision, said Ald. Sandy Noel.

"Every time a major traffic route is built it hurts somebody," he said.

Warren told the meeting 28,000 vehicles used the Trans-Canada highway every day.

The McKenzie extension will take 30 per cent of that traffic, or 8,000 vehicles daily.

The figures were compiled by the ministry of highways from roadside interviews, Warren said.

The extension will also handle one-third of the heavy traffic load carried by Tillicum, he said.

A municipal traffic count this year found 13,700 vehicles a day use Tillicum and that residents are having problems with the solid traffic flow past their front doors.

One man told council it took him 15 minutes every morning to get out of his driveway.

Major developments such as Tillicum shopping centre, Royal Oak industrial park and the new Helmcken Road hospital will increase the daily east-west traffic flow by 4,000 to 5,000 vehicles.

Total traffic volume when the developments are completed will be equivalent to that carried on a four-lane highway, he said.

If the extension is scrapped the district will be faced with a $2 or $3 million cost of developing other routes, Warren said.

Under a cost-sharing formula agreed to three years ago, the municipality will only have to pay $180,000, or 2.6 per cent of the costs of the McKenzie extension, he said.

Warren said the municipality has received five letters and a 118-signature petition in favor of the extension.

Greater Victoria School Board chairman Carol Pickup reprimanded Mayor Mel Couvelier for not including the board in discussions before approving the ministry's preliminary design in August.

Pickup said the extension will affect five and possibly seven schools in the area.

"We feel we've been left in the dark," she said, speaking for the board, district planners and schools superintendent Allan Stables.

Patricia Van't Haaff, an official of the Garden City Homeowners Association, said the extension will split the community and inflict the stress of relocation on residents who have lived in the area 25 or 30 years.

Van't Haaff, of 710 Violet, said the extension will mean an unsightly overpass, bridges across Swan Lake and destruction of the last stand of evergreen trees in the area.

Residents collected information for their well-documented brief by six months of digging. Only after threatening the municipality with legal action were they allowed to see the final plans for the highway, Van't Haaff charged.

Some residents still have no idea what's going on, she said.

Van' Haaff said she called Mayor Couvelier 10 times without response and was treated rudely by municipal and highways staff.

The mayor said he wasn't aware of her calls and that he felt like "an animal in a shooting gallery."

"I resent the implication I'm not doing my job," Couvelier snapped.

Erasing Senate impossible, Supreme Court rules

OTTAWA (CP) — A proposal by the former Liberal government, introduced in Parliament in mid-1978 and which would have replaced the Senate with a House of Federation, is unconstitutional, the Supreme Court of Canada said today in an unanimous judgment.

The bill was part of a package of constitutional changes proposed by then prime minister Trudeau and opposed bitterly by senators.

The bill was given second reading and sent to a joint Commons-Senate committee. The government later took the advice of the committee and asked the Supreme Court to rule whether the Senate proposals could be approved by Parliament without the consent of the provinces.

The proposals are contrary to the British North America Act, in effect the Canadian constitution, said the court.

The court said that while the proposals would not alter federal-provincial relationships in the sense of changing federal and provincial legislative powers, "it does envisage the elimination of one of the two Houses of Parliament, and so would alter the structure of the federal Parliament to which the federal power is entrusted under Section 91 of the British North America Act."

"The Senate has a vital role as an institution forming part of the federal system created by the act," the court said.

It said the power to enact federal legislation was given to the Queen "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and the House of Commons."

"Thus the body which had been created as a means of protecting sectional and provincial interests was made a participant in this legislative process."

The court noted that the power to amend the constitution of Canada "was not intended to include the power to eliminate the Senate or the House of Commons."

The nine justices also said Parliament does not have the authority to change the numbers and proportions of senators by whom provinces and territories are represented in the Senate.

The Trudeau government had proposed to replace the 104-seat Senate with a House of Federation with 118 members. It wanted to have half of them appointed by the provinces and half by the Commons.

Nor was it within the power of Parliament to provide for the direct election of any senators, said the court.

Canyon rails dug out again

VANCOUVER (CP) — CP Rail's line in the Fraser River canyon was re-opened today following a mud and rock slide which buried 150 metres of track and the final four cars of a freight train.

A railway spokesman said the line was cleared for operation about 3:45 a.m.

Four trainmen suffered minor injuries in the incident Wednesday.

Egg tab probe urged

OTTAWA (CP) — The Consumers Association of Canada has called for an open examination of how egg prices are determined.

CAC President Yvonne Miles made the request this week in letters to Agriculture Minister John Wise, the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency and the National Farm Products Marketing Council.

The egg agency is under orders to re-examine the complicated mechanism it uses to set prices farmers will get for their eggs. The consumers association has criticized the egg agency and says it wants to participate fully in the current study.

Miles said the association needs data from the agency, the farm products council, a federal agency that oversees marketing boards, and the agriculture department itself to be able to participate.

Hotly-disputed studies by the Agriculture Economics Research Council of Canada and the agriculture department have suggested consumers may be paying too much for their eggs.

These studies and other concerns resulted in a meeting in October of representatives of farmers and provincial and federal governments on the egg agency's pricing formula.

Instead of reaching a decision then, it was decided to instruct the agency to study the pricing formula further to settle concerns over adjustment provisions which have been an issue for at least four years.

The meeting followed the resignation of the agency's chairman Murray McBride who said it was no longer possible to represent the public on the board of directors. He said the producer groups had forgotten that it is the public and not the farmers who pay the operating costs of the agency.

Beer label gets okay

OTTAWA (CP) — Just in time for Christmas — the Supreme Court of Canada has ruled that Labatt's brewery may sell its Special Lite label in Canada.

In a 6-to-3 decision today the court said that tipplers are not likely to mistake Special Lite as a light beer as described by the federal Food and Drugs Act.

The act describes a light beer as one with an alcoholic content of between 1.2 per cent and 2.5 per cent. Other beers have an alcoholic content of up to 5.5 per cent.

Labatt's Special Lite has an alcoholic content of four per cent and the Federal Court of Canada had ruled Labatt's would mislead consumers who would think they had ordered a light beer.

The written reasons for the court's decision are to be made public later.

Little computer chip a Christmas grinch

HONG KONG (UPI) — Many youngsters who put electronic games at the head of their Christmas lists are due for disappointment.

The coveted gift may end up as an Easter present instead.

The world's toymakers have been frantically assembling microprocessor games, but an acute shortage of chips, brains of the sophisticated units, have thwarted their efforts.

The situation developed so slowly manufacturers find it difficult to pinpoint the blame.

An executive with one independent Hong Kong supplier said, "The surge in demand outstripped the most optimistic estimates made when chip manufacturers planned their production schedules for this year."

Hong Kong imports its chips primrily from the United States. Some producers attribute the shortage to competition for the parts from the automobile and computer industries.

A spokesman for the Trade Development Council noted that early in 1979, sales of microprocessor games increased more than 500 percent over the previous year. That influenced many other local manufacturers — previously concentrated on consumer electronics such as calculators and video games — to shift production to the toys.

The expanding market was expected to boost the British Colony's toy exports to an all-time high, a goal it still may meet through sales of more traditional gifts.

Contributing to premature confidence that orders of microprocessor games could be met was the availability of skilled mold-makers, circuitry and other necessary ingredients.

Except the chips. As long as the chips poured in, thousands of the popular games were shipped to the United States, the primary buyer, and to Britain where they are catching on quickly.

But companies started to feel the supply pinch in August.

Manufacturers who did not purchase enough chips early in the year had to pay 30-40 per cent more for what chips were available, a price hike that ultimately will hit the consumer.

Charles Chapman, an authority on toys as editor of a Hong Kong industry publication, said, "There was no way anyone could have predicted such a shortage. Demand just outstripped the supply."

Despite obstacles, manufacturers here managed to produce 60 per cent of the market demand, Chapman said. Hong Kong's competitors, Taiwan and Japan, also face the chip shortage problem, he added.

"The demand is overwhelming and is expected to intensify in 1980," he said. "Some children may have to wait a while for their Christmas gift."

Hand-held microprocessor games, now in their "first generation," will be expanded soon, Chapman said. Each currently provides one game such as hockey, soccer, football, car racing, chess or checkers.

Next year multiple games in one unit will emerge, Chapman said.

Market hours

TORONTO (CP) — Canadian stock markets will be open for a half day Monday, Dec. 24, denying employees and investors a long weekend during the Christmas holiday season.

Canadian stock exchanges will be closed both Christmas and Boxing Day, Dec. 26. United States markets are open on Boxing Day.

Canadian exchanges will be closed New Year's Day, a Tuesday, but will reopen Jan. 2.

Company reports

Massey-Ferguson

Massey Ferguson Ltd. has reported a loss for the year ending Oct. 31 of $35,437,000 (U.S.), compared with a restated loss of $167,478,000 a year earlier.

Sales were $2,972,966,000, compared with $2,630,978,000.

The provision for reorginization expense was $95 million in 1979, compared with a restated $73 million last year. There was a $6.3-million net gain on foreign exchange this year, compared with a loss of $57.3 million in 1978.

A loss from discontinued operations of $23 million and an extraordinary tax credit of $95.4 million in the latest period resulted in final profit of $36,898,000 or $1.58 a share. In the year-ending period, a loss from discontinued operations of $95 million produced a final loss of $262,395,000.

Seagram

Seagram Co. Ltd. reported record earnings for the quarter ended Oct. 31, 1979, of $47.4 million, or $1.35 a share, up from $29 million, or 83 cents a share, for the same period last year.

Earnings before foreign exchange fluctuations rose to $39.6 million, or $1.13 a share, from $34.1 million, or 97 cents a share.

Sales increased by 10 per cent to $769.7 million from $697 million. All quotations are in U.S. funds.

Standard Life

The Standard Life of Assurance Co. in Canada has reported that its assets for the fiscal year ended November 15, 1979, rose by 15 per cent to $2.28 billion from $1.97 billion last year.

J. C. Burns, president of Canadian operations of the Edinburgh-based company, said the figures included assets for segregated and pooled investment funds with a market value of $756 million in 1979 and $609 million in 1978.

Standard also reported insurance in force in 1979 amounted to $2.7 billion and payments to policyholders and beneficiaries totalled $187 million. Rate of interest earned on funds increased to 9.41 per cent in 1979 from 8.95 per cent in 1978.

Northland Bank

Northland Bank of Alberta will be seeking to make larger loans in the coming year, shareholders were told at the bank's annual meeting.

Senior vice-president Eric Young, also the bank's chief general manager, said Northland's average loan this year amounted to $317,000.

Northland president Robert A. Wilson predicted at the meeting that his bank will experience a 55 to 60-per-cent increase in total assets next year, bringing it to $240 million.

Truckers end fuelish ways

EDMONTON (CP) — As rising gasoline prices take the fun out of driving, truckers are becoming more businesslike than ever — even in oil-rich Alberta.

"We've had a 25- to 33-per-cent increase in (fuel) efficiency since 1973," says Ernie Figol, president of Figol Distributors Ltd. of Edmonton.

"At least 50 per cent of our customers are concerned about fuel economy now," says Ben Reid, branch manager of the manufacturing firm International Trucks Ltd. "That's up significantly from the past."

"Now even the cowboys (independent owner-operators) are looking at saving fuel," says Ivor Holland, branch manager of Western Mack Truck (Edmonton) Ltd.

The big push for fuel economy has hit the medium-size truck market, Reid said. He said as many as two-thirds of those vehicles being sold have diesel engines.

"You can realize a 60- to 75-per-cent increase in fuel economy (in trucks) by switching from gasoline power to diesel."

Holland said manufacturers have created more efficient engine, body and transmission body designs in the '70s.

As a result, double-clutching through 16 gears may become a thing of the past. The more fuel-efficient engine operates at a lower engine speed and uses as few as five gears.

Archie Fraser, president of Edmonton Peterbilt Trucks Ltd., says wind deflectors can cut fuel consumption by as much as five per cent and radial tires can save another five to 10 per cent.

Lower speeds cut fuel consumption. Slower driving can also reduce wear and tear, said Reid.

Bill Storoschuk, Edmonton terminal manager for Canadian Freightways, says his company has mounted devices that measure the speed at which its trucks are driven.

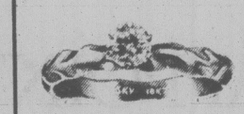

"Since we first got our drivers to stay at 55 miles an hour, our over-all maintenance costs have gone down."

Petro-Can: gov't to hold one third retain about one-third of the Petro-Canada shares, which would mean that slightly less than 70 per cent of the shares would be sold or given away.

Wilson said if re-elected Feb. 18 the Conservatives would introduce legislation to allow the federal government to distribute the shares and to contract with the company to do oil exploration and other energy projects.

The government also would contract with Petro-Canada to do state-to-state oil trading. The government has been negotiationing with Mexico and Venezuela to buy oil. But Petro-Canada has been virtually excluded by the Tory government from these negotiations, although the previous Liberal government was encouraging participation by the Crown company.

Mexico and Venezuela have made clear they want to deal with a government company, although the Conservatives have said the countries did not specify it must be Petro-Canada.

During the May 22 election campaign, the Conservatives said they would sell Petro-Canada to private interests. After the election, they appointed a task force which recommended that the profitable parts of the company be sold or given to the public and the company's money-losing interests be kept by the federal government.

Wilson, who headed a special cabinet committee on Petro-Canada, said the Conservative plan "would give Canadians a direct stake in their own country."

Hnatyshyn said the Conservative plan would give "Petro-Canada a new mandate to build a truly Canadian energy corporation with the competitive muscle to take on the private multi-national oil companies in the market place."

The company could "become the major influence in promoting an efficient, competitive market." It could also step up the search for new energy supplies.

It could become "the best of all worlds" with Canadians playing a greater role in the search for their future energy needs.

Wilson said that 90 per cent of the public has never invested in the stock market and the Petro-Canada shares could become an inducement for Canadians "to expand their interest in other equity investments opportunities."

Clark's promise to give away shares of Petro-Canada seems designed to appeal to the would-be stock market baron that Premier Bennett found in British Columbians.

The B.C. premier mined that seam of latent capitalism prior to his government's re-election earlier this year and struck pay dirt when he gave every qualified resident of the province five free shares in the British Columbia Resources Investment Corp.

The added appeal of something for nothing — even though the former Crown corporation belonged to British Columbians anyway — made the giveaway an enormous success.

U.S. firm set to pick up Trident: MLA

If Trident Aircraft Ltd. fails to weather its financial problems, a U.S. aerospace giant will be waiting to pick up the pieces.

That warning from Victoria NDP MLA Charles Barber was made to 200 people — mostly employees and their spouses — in Sansha Hall Thursday night.

Barber suggested that Grumman Aircraft Ltd., which already holds an eight per cent interest in Trident, had done studies showing 800 to 1,000 of the pusher-prop planes could be sold.

Trident is struggling to stay in business, but federal small business minister Ron Huntington says he doesn't think the Trigull is viable.

Trident president Jerry Vaverek disagrees, and he wants is the balance of the $6 million funding promised by the federal government.

He has said a decision is imminent on the fate of the company.

Vaverek claims that only $1,950,000 has been received from the Industrial Development Bank to date.

At Thursday's meeting called by the Trident's 110 employees, Barber said he expects Grumman would either take over Trident or increase its holdings if the federal funds to save it were not forthcoming.

In all likelihood, said Barber, the plane would then be made in the U.S.

Most of the questions fielded by Esquimalt-Saanich Conservative MP Donald Munro boiled down to one theme: Why has the government cut off financing when a successful production start is just around the corner?

But Munro's claim the Conservatives had only inherited a problem from the Liberals, was coolly received.

Referring to Barber's prediction of a takeover, Munro said any such attempt by Grumman would have to be reviewed by the Foreign Investment Review Agency.

Munro wanted to know why Trident waited so long before considering making parts for other aircraft firms and looking for other work to offset costs.

Why had shareholders put up only $1.7 million, he asked, when the federal government had either provided or pledged more than $7 million?

The bulk of the pledged funds, however, have not been delivered.

Some employees at the meeting said the company had only recently received the machinery to produce parts, but the paperwork to get federal approval for such production still had to be done.

There were no shareholders on hand to answer why shareholder investment wasn't higher.

Feds' stadium share $50M?

VANCOUVER (CP) — Premier Bill Bennett asked Prime Minister Clark for $50 million for a multi-purpose stadium Thursday and the federal leader said he'd think about it.

Bennett wants Ottawa to pay half the cost of a $100-million domed amphitheatre which has been recommended for the north shore of False Creek near the heart of the business district.

The premier said federal funds should cover half the stadium costs because construction would be tied to Transpo 86, an international exposition on transportation set for Vancouver in 1986.

"We have not seen it (the stadium study) and we haven't judged it," Clark told a news conference during a day of speeches and campaigning for the Feb. 18 federal election.

Later, Clark said he and Bennett discussed the stadium in general terms and he wants to wait for the B.C. response to the latest stadium report before making a commitment.

Bennett said Expo 67, the world's fair that came to Montreal in Canada's centennial year, set a precedent for a 50-50 sharing in costs between a province and the federal government.

"I plan to put party leaders in the current federal election campaign on the spot and get a commitment for funding the amphitheatre and Transpo," Bennett said.

He said his cabinet won't decide until next month whether to accept or reject the recommendations in the report of stadium commissioner Paul Manning, 34, a defeated Liberal candidate in the last federal election.

Vancouver Mayor Jack Volrich said in a telephone interview from Hawaii, where he is on vacation, that the Manning recommendations are only one opinion.

Volrich, who has supported a stadium for the city's Pacific National Exhibition grounds, said an important planning decision should not be based "on a kind of 'crash' report," a reference to the 11 weeks Manning spent studying possible sites.

However, the mayor said he was gratified that Manning recommends the stadium be paid for and run by a provincial corporation, freeing Vancouver residents of the prospect of paying for part of it.

The stadium proposed in the Manning report released Thursday would have 60,000 seats and be designed for soccer, football and baseball.

Gov't nurses vote strike

VANCOUVER (CP) — Provincial government nurses have voted by an overwhelming 91-per-cent majority to strike if necessary to back 1980 contract demands.

The vote was announced Thursday by the 1,500-member Registered Psychiatric Nurses' Association and the 1,100-member Registered Nurses' Association, who are bargaining jointly with the province.

The nurses' last contract was settled by arbitration just three weeks before the expiry date of Dec. 31, 1979. Spokesmen for the nurses said they will strike this time if the government stalls.

Union leaders said they will look for salary increases of more than 17 per cent for 1980.

CanCel trying to halt walkout

PRINCE RUPERT (CP) — Canadian Cellulose has asked the B.C. Labor Relations Board to issue a cease and desist order to force 650 members of the Pulp, Paper and Woodworkers of Canada, Local 4, back to work.

Three union crews walked off the job Wednesday night at the Cancel pulp mill on Watson Island just south of this north coast port in a dispute over contracting-out of work. The remaining members of the local refused to cross the picket lines.

Union president Len Dirks said the excutive does not condone the walkout, although it does sympathize with the individuals who precpitated it.

"The local agreement states that if we can do something as economically as a contractor then the job is ours," he said.

The local is the only one in the province which has not signed the master contract agreement reached with pulp and paper companies last summer.

$21,000 after bouncer broke his leg

VANCOUVER (CP) — Tugboat deck hand Allan Munn, 25, will receive $21,000 damages and costs for having his leg broken by a disco bouncer.

Earlier this week, Justice H.E. Hutcheon ruled that R. B. and H. Holdings, owners of the Body Shop disco, and bouncer Arthur Kelly Anderson were liable for Munn's injury last March 17.

The British Columbia Supreme Court judge accepted Munn's evidence that Munn was told to leave by Anderson because he was drunk and, when he refused, was seized by Anderson and another man, pushed out of the fire doors into a hallway, where Anderson broke Munn's leg.

Rape victim awarded $3,270

VANCOUVER (CP) — A young female hitchhiker from Delta who suffered numerous bodily injuries and mental anxiety after she was beaten and raped by a man who gave her a ride has been awarded $3,270 under the Criminal Injuries Compensation Act.

Forty-eight awards totalling $175,894 were made in November including an award of $325 a month to the widow and two children of a 37-year-old Burnaby, B.C., man who was fatally stabbed by a male assailant.

Under the act, administered by the Worker's Compensation Board, anyone who is a victim of crime in B.C. may apply for compensation.

Patient's body found in duct

VANCOUVER (CP) — The badly-decomposed body of an 82-year-old man who disappeared from a ward at Shaughnessy Hospital has been found in a hospital ventilation duct.

Hospital acting director Evelyn Dragojevich said Sidney Parrick apparently entered the duct through an opening on the hospital roof.

Halt projects, band urges

KITIMAT (CP) — The Haisla Indian band has demanded a moratorium on all industrial projects within its traditional tribal lands until the federal and provincial governments deal with native land claims.

Chief councillor Heber Maitland said Thursday the band is not opposed to development, but "we want the land claims settled and we want a share in development."

"There never has been any treaty signed between my people and the government and we're asking for this moratorium because of the inactivity by all government levels in coming to grips with our land claims."

The Haisla land includes the site of Alcan Smelters and Chemicals Ltd.'s proposed $1.5-billion expansion of the Kemano aluminum smelting plant.

Alcan plans to triple its aluminum smelting capacity at Kitimat, about 600 kilometres northwest of Vancouver. The project calls for increased daming and flooding to provide the necessary additional power.

Maitland, who represents almost 1,900 status and non-status Indians, says the Haisla are concerned the project will lower river levels and harm fishing, a traditional food source for them.

He said his people think at least four pieces of land Alcan is working on belong to the band.

Alcan says it legally purchased the land on which it is operating.

"The area in which completion of the project would take place was granted to us by the provincial government under a water license which we feel to be a legal document," said Les Holroyd, company public relations spokesman.

Alcan has promised to hold public information meeting on the Kemano expansion plan.

Restaurant workers can't cash paycheques

VANCOUVER (CP) — With Christmas just days away, employees of the strikebound Muckamuck restaurant are stuck with paycheques they can't cash and no hope of work until after the new year.

Management closed the 110-seat restaurant Monday, blaming the bitter 19-month labor dispute. Prior to the closure, the restaurant often had only two or three tables of customers who were not turned away by the taunts of the pickets outside.

Manager Sussy Selbst says the restaurant will reopen Jan. 4.

Ms. Selbst said three staff members have cashed their cheques at the restaurant, but the others have been told to wait until the restaurant can cover the amounts.

The restaurant's problems began 19 months ago when a majority of its 18 employees, represented by the Service, Office and Retail Workers of Canada union, voted to strike for better working conditions.

Because most of the Muckamuck's current staff was hired during the strike, the dispute has developed into a three-way standoff between management, the strikers and the present staff.

BCR strike effect delayed: officials

VANCOUVER (CP) — The full effect of the British Columbia Railway strike will not be felt by the province's northern communities until after New Year's, some forest industry officials said Thursday.

Despite a call for swift government action to end the strike by 2,200 rail workers, which began Tuesday night, normal holiday closures at many northern mills will reduce the impact until then.

The walkout, which occurred after B.C. Rail and the Council of Railway Unions failed to reach agreement on train crew sizes and other issues in contract talks, has stalled shipments of lumber, grain, coal, potash, sulphur and other products.

Main issues in the dispute are crew sizes on trains, retroactive pay and wage and other monetary benefits. There were 120 issues unsettled when talks failed Sunday night. A brief attempt to resume negotiations Tuesday collapsed.

The government-owned railway normally moves 150,000 carloads annually, 80 per cent of it generated by the forest industry.

But some industry spokesmen say the impact of the strike will be reduced in the next few weeks because there are few operating days during the holiday period.

"The industries up here are concerned about the strike," said Van Scoffield, manager of the northern Interior lumber sector of the B.C. Council of Forest Industries. "But with the down time due to the holiday season, it is unlikely to have serious effects for the next two weeks.

"In most cases, there are only three or four days of operating from now until Jan. 2," he added.

"We're not going to take a position on the strike . . .or to apply any pressure until after the holiday period. The question of pressuring the government to institute the Essential Services Disputes Act won't come up until then."

So far, Premier Bill Bennett and Labor Minister Jack Heinrich have rejected appeals from some northern officials, notably Fort Nelson Mayor Doug MacPhail and MLA Jack Kempf (SC-Omineca), for government action to end the walkout.

Heinrich said Thursday he is considering "all kinds of possibilities" but wants the parties to return to bargaining.

B.C. Rail spokesman Hugh Armstrong said while the railway serves 55 northern communities, all are served by highway, air or both.

Bert McGraw, general manager of the Canfor mill in Chetwynd, 160 kilometres northeast of Prince George, said his firm was considering trucking wood chips to Prince George.

Just don't drink the stuff

VANCOUVER (CP) — Police and pesticide control officers said Thursday they will return 368 cans of Lysol spray seized Oct. 31 from a skid road store.

They took the cans because they were allegedly being sold to alcoholics and drunk as a wine additive.

The Lysol, which contains 67 per cent ethyl alcohol, will be returned with a warning that selling the product for drinking purposes could result in criminal charges.

Door was opened to death: witness

VANCOUVER (CP) — It was an open invitation to death when a high-rise apartment tenant fled from his burning suite without closing the door, an inquest was told Thursday.

"If the door had been closed, the fire would have been contained in the suite," fire investigator Lt. Joseph Pears testified.

Instead, a wave of smoke and heat greeted fire department Capt. John Graham, 52, when he and two other firefighters stepped out of the elevator on the fire floor.

The coroner's jury said the intensity of heat and gases would likely have been less in the hallway where Graham died if the door had been closed to the apartment of Michael Younie where the fire started Nov. 10, in the city's West End.

The jury found that Graham and a tenant, William Bell, 75, died of smoke inhalation and classed the deaths as unnatural and by misadventure.

Pears said the fire was started by a cigarette ember in a chesterfield. Evidence showed the apartment door was open, he said, and intense heat and gases were produced.

Staff laid off by ailing club

The executive of the Racquet Club of Victoria Society has laid off employees to reduce the club's costs while maintaining facilities at peak standards.

Saddled with the job of shepherding the debt-wracked club through what might be its dying days, society president Peter Crisp said the layoffs — 18 regular and 10 casual employees — were made with the greatest reluctance.

"We would re-employ the same people if we could," he said.

But there seems little likelihood of that happening in the immediate future.

Club general manager Ernst Rieder said the eight full-time and two part-time employees kept on are being helped by several society members who have volunteered their services to keep the club operating.

Reviewing the possibilities for the club's future, Crisp said several things could happen.

A miraculous infusion of cash might permit the club to continue to operate as a private club

Saanich municipality has a committee headed by Ald. Howard Sturrock checking into the club's affairs with a view to the municipality buying the club's extensive facilities.

Barring a miracle or sale to the municipality, Crisp said the holder of the mortgage on the club's facilities (actually owned by the Racquet Club of Victoria Holdings Ltd.) could conceivably foreclose.

Crisp said there was always the possibility the $3.5 million structure on the Gordon Head site could fall before a wrecker's ball, as the land involved is quite valuable.

"It would be a tragedy if it was lost," he said.

"I wouldn't want to drive up Gordon Head Road and see a bunch of houses where the Racquet Club once stood."

Returning to the club's current status, Crisp said that thanks to the volunteers, whoever takes over will inherit a facility in the best possible condition.

"The club has always acted responsibly and we're going to continue to do so," Crisp said.

THE GREAT GASOLINE REBATE

Save at least 4.3¢ a litre on December 21 and 22, 1979

Because of the recent increase in federal excise and sales taxes on gasoline, for part of last week our customers paid more than they should. That's why Esso and many of its dealers now offer a sale on gasoline as a form of reimbursement.

The sale price reduction will be at least equivalent to the recent increase in federal excise and sales taxes.

The two-day sale will take place at participating Esso service stations, Friday, December 21st, 1979 and Saturday, December 22nd, 1979. Stations may elect to end the sale early when the full amount of the additional tax collected from customers has been rebated.

Physicist filling a bookshelf gap

By HUMPHRY DAVY

In the late 50s a physicist giving a helping hand to the regional library in Cornwall, Ont., noticed there were no popular scientific books on the shelves written by Canadian scientists.

There were some British but nearly all were written by Americans.

Dorothy Harper was surprised, especially in view of the high regard Canadian scientific institutions enjoy at the international level.

A survey of other libraries confirmed that most Canadians read the views and works of foreign scientists because of the lack of Canadian scientific literature in public and university libraries.

A few years later when Harper attempted to get a book on isotopes published in Canada, she couldn't find a willing publisher because it was considered too risky a venture. She eventually found one in England.

This gave her the idea to establish a science series — books written by Canadians on scientific subjects ranging from energy to land use. The aim would be to make them understandable to the layman.

Today Harper, a former professor of physics at Bishop's University in Quebec, now living in Victoria, is recruiting scientists for the Canada Science Book series. She feels she has proved Canadians like to read works by their own scientists.

She says she won't have to go far.

"There are many active and retired scientists living right here in Victoria," she says. "We have a goodly number of institutions such as the Institute of Ocean Sciences, Federal Forestry Research Centre, Dominion Astrophysical Observatory, Pacific Naval Laboratory, the University of Victoria and several private reseach companies."

She admits getting the scientific book project off the ground was not easy because publishers were wary of tackling books by Canadian scientists.

To start the ball rolling, she first wrote the book Eye in the Sky dealing with the physical principles of the phenomena associated with remote sensing, systems involving radar and lasers and the data collected by satellites.

She finally found a publisher, Multiscience Publications Ltd. of Montreal. And so the first of the series of scientific books appeared.

It was an immediate success, and has gone through two editions and a third printing is under way.

Harper than got two other scientists, P. Kruus and I.M. Valeriote of Carleton University, to write a book entitled Controversial Chemicals: A Citizen's Guide.

And now Harper has written a third book Let's Use the Sun, dealing with sun and solar radiation and the application of solar processes to the heating of buildings. It is just off the press.

"It's not a do-it-yourself book, but deals with the basic principles underlaying the design of solar heating systems," she explained. "If you understand or know why you are doing such and such a thing, you can build a much more efficient solar system."

She has taken a nationalistic approach to the subject. This is justifiable, she says, because climatic conditions and living styles in Canada differ considerably from those in other parts of the world and even vary across the country.

Harper has some advice for people interested in establishing solar heating systems in their homes to cut fuel costs.

"It's expensive," she warns. "I wouldn't rush into it until I had carefully studied alternatives."

She advised people with not much money to spare to concentrate first on insulating their homes.

"If you find insulation does the trick, reduces your fuel bill considerably, then there is no sense in spending money on an expensive solar system," she said.

On other sources of energy, Harper said geothermal energy (hot springs) is a resource which still remains to be tapped.

"It is estimated that if sufficient effort were put into the development of suitable technologies for its extraction, geothermal energy could provide a significant part of U.S. electric power by 1985," she said.

New lighting for McPherson

A $39,000 purchase of stage lighting instruments for the McPherson Theatre was approved Thursday by city council's finance committee.

But aldermen asked for more information on a further $50,000 spending proposal.

John Dyck, executive director of the non-profit foundation which runs the city-owned theatre, said in a letter the money is to be used for repainting the interior and replacing lobby furniture.

The theatre was restored 15 years ago and is showing signs of wear and tear.

Dyck said the foundation has placed special emphasis on maintaining the arts centre in mint condition and has avoided certain necessary expenditures until now.

But there is an urgent and immediate need for new lighting equipment and lobby furniture and a new coat of paint.

The committee approved the lighting equipment purchase, which Dyck said has to be ordered now, but the other items have been set aside for the time being.

Gas hike was illegal?

CALGARY (CP) — The federal corporate and consumer affairs department is clarifying allegations that hundreds of service stations across the country illegally increased their gasoline prices last week, a department official says.

Don Mercer, of the combines investigation branch, said Wednesday in a telephone interview from Ottawa that the department has received complaints from Ron Hayter, an Edmonton alderman, who charged that gasoline prices were increased prematurely following an increase in the federal excise tax.

Hayter also said some stations raised their prices above the excise tax increase called for in the federal budget.

The excise tax was withdrawn following the defeat of the Progressive Conservative government last week.

Hayter said the 18-cent-a-gallon increase in the excise tax should only apply to gasoline received by retailers after the federal budget was tabled, yet many operators increased their prices on existing stocks.

Mercer said the size and timing of the retail gasoline prices would be the key questions. He said the department would be concerned if a conspiracy existed to increase gasoline prices above the 18-cent level or if it was done prematurely.

"I can't say we are investigating but it would be fair to say we are clarifying the complaints raised," Mercer said. Under the Combines Investigation Act, all inquiries are confidential until a decision is made or charges have been laid.

"If, after that, we have reason to believe there has been an offence, an inquiry would be launched."

In Edmonton, Hayter said some stations raised their prices by as much as four cents a gallon beyond the increase in the excise tax.

"I asked for an investigation into the entire situation but I haven't heard anything to this point," he said.

Heritage fund now at $5.46B

EDMONTON (CP) — Alberta's Heritage Savings Trust Fund assets grew by $377 million in the three months ended Sept. 30, reaching $5.46 billion.6

Provincial Treasurer Lou Hyndman released a quarterly report on the fund today.

The current growth rate would put the fund at $6.2 billion by the end of the fiscal year, March 31.

The Fund earned $79 million on investments during the second quarter. The investments included $1.7 billion in marketable securities and $269.5 million in loans to four provinces.

Another $298 million was transferred from general revenue.

Last FLQ terrorist to return

MONTREAL (CP) — Allain Allard, a onetime member of the Front de Liberation du Quebec, will return to Montreal Saturday after spending almost 11 years of exile in Cuba, police confirmed today.

Allard, thought to be the last FLQ exile on the Caribbean island, was expected to be arrested shortly after his arrival in Montreal on charges arising from terrorist bombings in 1968-69, said well-informed sources.

He will be returning from Havana with his Cuban wife and child, one source said. He had been negotiating the return through a Montreal lawyer for the last several months.

Allard's return comes a year after that of his fellow FLQ exile, Jean-Pierre Charette, who came back last January, pleaded guilty to three terrorist bombings and was sentenced to six months in jail. He was released on parole last June and has since written a book about his experiences in Cuba.

A real bum rap!

MONTREAL (CP) — City police are looking for a jewel thief who found out Wednesday that crime can be a bit of a bummer.

The man fled with three companions from the suburban home of a wholesale jeweller with an undetermined amount of jewels — but not before the homeowner had wounded him in the rear end with a decorative sword.

The jeweller, Constantin Barcados of Westmount, lost his temper and attacked the man from behind after he was forced to open his safe at the point of a shotgun, and swords from his own wall.

Borcados was hit by a blast from the shotgun, and later released from hospital. All four men are still being sought.

'Friend' jailed for robbing win

TORONTO (CP) — A Strathroy, Ont., businessman who was supposed to collect a $1.2-million lottery jackpot on behalf of a friend and then turn it over to him was sentenced to a year in jail Thursday for stealing it.

James Nicholas, 46, was convicted Wednesday of theft of more than $200 and County Court Judge George Ferguson described the crime as a serious breach of trust.

Previous testimony showed that the $1.2 million was won in a Lottario draw by Dr. Megeri Ede, of Kingston, Ont., who asked Nicholas to collect the money on his behalf.

It was the largest jackpot won by anyone in Canada.

Testimony showed that Nicholas would be paid $800 plus expenses for helping Ede avoid the publicity such a large prize was sure to draw.

Nicholas picked up the money and deposited it in a Toronto bank in his own name and then later refused to turn it over to the rightful owner, court was told.

He was arrested at a hotel near Toronto International Airport, preparing to leave the country.

Play it again, Ed — and again, and again . . .

By WALTER STEWART
FP News Service

VANCOUVER — Sisyphus was the king of Corinth in Greek mythology, and Ed Broadbent is the leader of the NDP in modern Canada. Otherwise, the resemblance between the two is uncanny.

Sisyphus was condemned — "for meddling" — to push a rock up a hill forever. Every time he reached the top, the rock rolled back down, and he had to start over.

Broadbent is condemned — on the same charge — to explain to press and public how his party, which helped to thrust Canada into the current election, hopes to gain thereby, and how it will behave if it does.

Every time he gets his argument patted into place, someone, often a journalist, asks him to start again. At the end of his first week on the campaign trail, Broadbent was looking game and sounding confident, but it was clear he was going home to Ottawa to think about speeches and dream about rocks.

There are two NDP campaigns under way, one planned by the party, the other imposed by unkind fate.

The party plan is simplicity itself. This week, Broadbent was to spend hammering the other major parties and explaining why "Canada couldn't afford not to have an election." That settled, he would start in when the campaign resumes Jan. 3, laying out the NDP alternatives to the old parties and leading a march, if not to victory, at least to more than the party's current 27 seats in Parliament.

It was a good plan, and Broadbent sailed into battle with adjectives blazing. In speeches, press conferences and interviews in Toronto, Halifax, Winnipeg and Vancouver, he laid down his salvoes:

— Prime Minister Joe Clark "betrayed the Canadian people" by junking his major campaign promises as soon as he attained power. Broadbent listed the promises — to cut taxes, lower interest rates, modify the new strictures on unemployment insurance and solve Canada's energy crisis — which he says Clark has broken.

— "The culmination of this betrayal" was the budget that brought Clark to defeat. Sometimes, Broadbent describes this budget as "restrictive, arid and economically depressing"; at other times, it is "Economically depressing, restrictive and arid." In any event, the NDP doesn't like it, and by bringing it forward, Clark showed himself to be "rigid", "inflexible" or "unyielding" — choose one.

— Liberal and Conservative parties are virtually the same. In Toronto on Tuesday, Broadbent said "What Canada does not need now is to turn from the bumbling incompetence of Joe Clark's Tories to the tired and failed incompetence of the Trudeau Liberals." By the time he hit Winnipeg, the NDP leader had shortened this to: "There basically isn't any difference in their policies." In Vancouver, he castigated "Pierre Clark and Joe Trudeau."

Same argument, less elegance.

Ergo, it follows that Canadians who yearn for sense and stability should turn to the NDP.

That's the Week One message. It got a little local color as it travelled. Thus in Halifax Broadbent noted that the budget would take $1.1 billion out of the Atlantic economy and in Toronto that it threatened "the industrial guts of the country".

All good, strong, knock-'em-down stuff, and delivered with crips confidence.

Broadbent no longer chops wildly at the air when he speaks; he massages it; he is no longer shrill; rather, he is emerging as an attractive and thoughtful politician moving visibily towards the centre, where the votes are.

That, for the NDP, is the good news.

The bad news is the "Yeah-but" that springs to the lips of the media, the general public and even some of the less militant in his audiences.

The Yeah-but factor is producing a second campaign in which Broadbent spends his energy trying to assure the nation that, on Feb. 18, his party won't either (a) disappear down a rathole or (b) find itself back where it was Dec. 13, before the government fell.

"I like this stuff," said a long-time party worker after Broadbent's rousing performance in Toronto Tuesday night. "with this line, we could win 50 seats."

He paused and added, "Or five."

There's the rub.

The NDP has a credibility problem which, considering the performances of the recent Liberal and Conservative governments, may seem a bitter irony, but is nonetheless true.

The party cannot form the government, and if its fondest dreams come true, it will go back to Ottawa after the election as a stronger third party.

Terry Meagher, a senior official of both the Ontario Labor Federation and the federal NDP, says "We could get 20 per cent of the vote this time. That's the break-through point."

Take that as gospel and it would result in — depending on the breaks — five or six more seats than the party got with an 18-per-cent vote last time.

Say 34 seats, tops.

That would mean another minority government, Liberal or Conservative, and would put the NDP back where it was on Dec. 13, faced with the choice of supporting policies it abhors or, ulp, sending the nation back to the polls yet again.

Last May, Broadbent met this difficulty by asserting that he could too form a government, a statement that was received with the strained scepticism accorded an actress who starred in silent films and gives her age as 40.

Broadbent has dropped that line and says instead that it is up to the proprietor of a minority government — Clark or Pierre Trudeau — to work with Parliament, presumably by bending the knee slightly to his party from time to time.

So, at its best, the NDP campaign will bring Canada back to where it was before Finance Minister John Crosbie unlimbered his budget and his tongue.

At its worst, it will deliver a majority to one of the other parties.

That is why, day after day, as soon as Broadbent finishes explaining to the faithful what a good thing, in the long run, this election is, somebody pops up to say, Play it again, Ed.

ELECTION 80

Carney among runners

Times News Services

VANCOUVER — Economist Pat Carney was nominated Thursday as Progressive Conservative candidate in Vancouver Centre for the Feb. 18 federal election.

It will be the second try for a Commons seat for Ms. Carney who was narrowly defeated by Liberal Art Phillips in the May 22 general election.

An official recount gave Phillips, a former Vancouver mayor, the seat by just 85 votes over Ms. Carney.

Other who have announced their intentions for the election include:

Gordon Gibson, former B.C. Liberal leader and unsuccessful candidate in the May 22 general election. He will seek the Liberal nomination in North Vancouver-Burnaby riding, where he was defeated by Progressive Conservative MP Chuck Cook in the last election.

"B.C. needs strong representation in both national parties, no matter who wins the over-all election," Gibson said. "For that reason, I think B.C. voters will return a number of Liberals on Feb. 18 to represent our province in Parliament. I would like to be one of them."

Don Mazankowski, transport minister, will stand for re-election in Vegreville, Alta.

Eldon Woolliams, veteran Progressive Conservative MP passed over by Prime Minister Clark when he made up his first cabinet, said he will not run again.

He said he decided that after winning eight federal elections, "it was time to look at something else."

But he admitted his disappointment in not being made a minister by Clark when he formed his cabinet in June after winning the May 22 election.

He is the third longtime Tory MP from Alberta to say he won't run again. Gerald Baldwin, the Peace River MP elected along with Woolliams in 1958, and Athabaska MP Paul Yewchuk, first elected in 1968, announced their intentions earlier.

Jean Pigott, known to many in Ottawa as the Cookie Monster, will run again for the Tories.

The 55-year-old former bakery president, who always has a full cookie jar in her office to treat visitors and friends, said she will seek election in Ottawa-Centre riding.

Mrs. Pigott had been Conservative housing critic in the last Liberal Parliament. After her defeat she was brought into Prime Minister Clark's office as a special adviser on human resources. That meant she could recommend Tories for various vacancies in government.

James McGrath, fisheries minister, plans to seek nomination as Progressive Conservative candidate for St. John's East.

Wording of referendum widely condemned

the preamble will give the PQ a clear "propaganda" advantage over the federalist side which will have no way to make its position known on the ballot.

"We have a serious legal problem here," Ryan said. "They will realize they were too smart for their own good."

Jean-Luc Pepin, who chaired the Task Force on Canadian Unity, says the question to be put to Quebecers will not be the end of the debate, whatever the result.

Pepin said in an interview that people tend to believe the referendum will clarify everything once and for all. But the task force report noted that if secession comes about it will be the result of a long process, in which the referendum is only one step.

Another member of the task force, professor Ronald Watts of Queen's University, said he felt the phrasing of the question was clear.

The only ambiguity for Watts was who would negotiate for Canada. Of course that's not for Quebec to say, Watts noted.

It's now up to English Canada to show it is ready to endorse a form of renewed federalism, he said.

Gerald Beaudoin, dean of the civil law faculty at the University of Ottawa, is another task force member who felt the question didn't carry any surprises.

"The government has posed a question of strategy; personally I would have preferred a question of substance."

Former Liberal finance minister Jean Chretien, a Quebecer, called the wording "a fraud and a joke." Science Minister Heward Grafftey, one of only three Conservative Quebec MPs, said the question was "replete with ambiguities.

"Levesque has backed away from his statements on sovereignty-association but it is obvious he still wants to separate from Canada."

The reaction from provincial leaders was similar.

Alberta Intergovernmental Affairs Minister Dick Johnston said the wording was "really what we thought it would be" but said the province remains opposed to sovereignty-association.

Roy Romanow, intergovernmental affairs in Saskatchewan, said the wording "prolongs the uncertainty and confusion" and falsely assumes the rest of Canada would agree to Quebec's terms.

"Why should Saskatchewan people continue to buy goods from Quebec manufacturers at tariff-protected prices if, as Premier Levesque proposes, our agricultural products will not have free access to Quebec markets? Clearly that kind of association is unacceptable to us."

Ontario Premier William Davis said the question is vague and his intergovernmental affairs minister, Tom Wells, reiterated his government's vow not to negotiate sovereignty-association.

Nova Scotia Premier John Buchanan said the question is written "to cloud its real meaning and the provision for a second, more far-reaching referendum is also designed to confuse the Quebec people."

In Newfoundland, Premier Brian Peckford said the wording "complicates rather than clarifies the whole situation and I think it's going to cause an awful lot of confusion."

But the question was not without supporters, even outside Quebec. Several Acadians in the Maritimes offered at least qualfied praise.

Both Leger Comeau, president of the Societe Nationale des Acadiens, and Jean-Claude LeBlanc, president of the Societe des Acadiens du Nouveau-Brunswick, said the wording is honest.

LeBlanc said it is strategically sound and will result in a more accurate reflection of Quebecers' views because it promises another referendum after negotiations to take place.

In Quebec, the president of the Mouvement National des Quebecois, Claude Rochon, said a person would have to be a masochist or overcome with inferiority not to vote yes to the question.

Jean-Marie Cossette, president of the nationalist Societe St. Jean Baptiste of Montreal said yes now is the only answer for Quebecers.

But he said the government may be taking democracy too far in proposing a second referendum when one was enough.

Pierre Bourgault, well-known nationalist and often a thorn in Levesque's side, said he's disappointed in the question. He said it skirts the real issue — do Quebecers really want independence or not?

He said his participation in the referendum campaign now is in doubt.

Driver faces two charges

The suspect was arrested at 2707 Victor minutes after a man in a car eluded police in a chase through the Oaklands and Fernwood districts.

Police said two officers in a police paddy wagon on patrol on Bay Street at 2:07 a.m. spotted a car which a service station operator had earlier reported as being driven by a man who appeared to be impaired.

Short-changed!

Have you ever tried talking your bank into paying going rate of exchange for American coins?

By PAUL MINVIELLE

Money is money, isn't it?

Well, there's the paper money — greenbacks, folding stuff, bills, banknotes. Then there's coin, the stuff we all need to keep parking meters, drink machines and little kids filled and happy.

Then again, there's U.S. money — coins and currency.

So what's the difference? Don't four U.S. quarters get you a dollar?

Sure, but if you're doing your exchanging at a Canadian bank, odds are your four U.S. quarters will get you a Canadian dollar, and maybe, if you've hit the right bank, a bit of, the going rate of exchange on U.S. money.

It depends on the bank you're dealing with and if you stamp your feet a little. It's called the squeaky wheel syndrome.

A sneaky survey (our caller didn't identify himself) of bank main branches in Victoria revealed that most banks don't pay a premium on U.S. coins.

The ones that do want the coins rolled and they pay anywhere from 1 to 4 per cent less than the going exchange rate.

The Bank of British Columbia: "We don't pay exchange on silver coin."

What if the coins are wrapped?

"No, sir. We don't pay exchange on that."

Our caller altered tactics somewhat and at the next banks he called, he suggested he had $100 in U.S. coins on hand. Could he get the going exchange rate on the money?

The Bank of Montreal: "If they're all rolled, yes. We'll take them. We pay 1 per cent less than the going rate for cash."

This would have rated as the best deal offered by Victoria banks except for one little hitch: they'll only do it for B of M customers.

Why the discount?

"There's no way we can get rid of it," said the girl on the phone, "so we have to pay a fortune to ship it out. It has to go to Seattle."

It sure isn't standard right across Victoria.

The Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce switchboard operator said she didn't think exchange was paid on coinage. The bank's foreign exchange department agreed.

"We don't separate our coin. The only way you're going to get it (the exchange) is by going to the States. We don't buy coin and we don't separate our coin."

The Toronto-Dominion Bank: "No, we don't (pay exchange). We just don't have any facility for getting rid of it. It's just too costly."

The best deal on U.S. coins that the survey uncovered was at the Royal Bank, although even it leaves a lot to be desired.

"Yes, we pay exchange," said a man in the foreign exchange section. "Right now we pay $112.70." He explained that the bank will pay $112.70 Canadian for $100 in U.S. coinage. Properly wrapped, of course.

The same amount in U.S. funds will get you the current exchange rate, about $1.16 Canadian for every $1 U.S.

Why the difference?

"I suppose it's due to the handling needed with coins," he said.

There don't appear to be any rules controlling the banks on the matter so you just have to shop around for the best deal.

TOWN TALK

When he was mayor of Oak Bay, Brian Smith was a vocal exponent of more provincial aid for education costs.

Now that he's education minister, he's holding the line on government spending.

Has he changed his mind?

"No, I've changed my job," he says.

What he did before, Smith said, was the job of a mayor.

"But the job of a minister of education is to deal with the needs of the entire province."

Hmmmm.

That gutter and curb work on Southgate at the northeast corner of the park doesn't involve park land, a spokesman for the city engineering department assures Town Talk.

He was replying to complaints that the road work is alienating park land.

Park lovers apparently shout first and investigate second.

"It's a job that should have been done years ago," the engineering spokesman says. "It involves a couple of feet of roadside property."

He said the gutter will improve drainage and the curb will stop cars from parking on the grass in the park.

School choirs have been singing Christmas carols in the lobby of city hall all this week, and almost everyone seems to enjoy it.

Almost everyone, that is. One person phoned up Thursday, complaining about all the noise booming out of Centennial Square.

Officials note with satisfaction that this particular grinch lives in Oak Bay.

Still on the Christmas kick, those sweet sounds of Christmas floating across the Inner Harbor this week came from a pair of tinsel-upped water boats, in a marine version of old English carolling.

The carol-singing crews under afterdeck canopies, aided by recorded music, were organized as a gesture of goodwill by Brady-Lee Charters.

The letter from the little girl to Santa read: "All I want for Christmas is don't upset me."

Strange the way kids put things, thought reporter Paul Minvielle as he included the snippet in his Wednesday story on letters addressed to the North Pole that end up at the Vancouver Post Office.

Deskman Gordie Forbes thought it was kind of funny too, putting the quote into a headline.

That evening, Jason Minvielle, 10, read the story.

"What's a dumb game?" their Dad asked.

"Hey dad! I found a dollar!"

He handed over a rumpled $20 bill.

Temptation tugged dad toward the door. Into the parking lot. There, a fortyish man dangling an unlit cigarette from his lips shuffled distractedly in and around the stalls, scouring the nightsoaked pavement with downturned eyes.

"Lose something?"

"Twenty dollars."

"Here . . . thank the four-year-old . . ."

On Oct. 18 he was at McDonald's on Pandora Avenue. He left his four-year-old German Shepherd Pango and his two-year-old Doberman Cleo in his car.

He came out to find Cleo missing and was told by a couple in another car they had seen a man in a gold Honda Civic take Cleo and drive away.

Since then, he's spotted 174 gold Honda Civics around town and checked out every owner with the help of the Motor-Vehicle Branch — at a cost of 25 cents each.

Renaud has run advertisements in newspapers and on radio, without success.

As a final resort, he now has had flyers printed with three pictures of his missing pet and is distributing them around town.

He describes Cleo as being black with brown markings. Her tail is clipped but her ears are floppy.

Renaud says she was probably easy to hjack because she is very friendly.

If you know where she is give Renaud a ring at 381-0525 or 385-9113.

Man stabbed in chest

City police said Guillermo Gomez was walking home with his wife Susan, 18, shortly after midnight when a man bumped into them.

Police said the man, who appeared to be drunk, became belligerent and pulled a knife.

Gomez went home and was later taken to hospital where he is in good condition.

New unit urged for street drunks

City police and hospital officials say there should be some other facility besides police cells to hold persons arrested for being drunk in a public place.

Deputy Chief Jim Smith said that while police have always been charged with the responsibility of picking up sreet drunks, officers are ill-equipped to handle problems that may arise.

He said police have neither the time, the expertise nor the facilities to look after drunks and because of that, their care and custody should be given to someone else.

"I think maybe there is a need for another kind of care than detaining the person in a cell until he sobers up," he said.

CARLOW
. . .'always a risk'

Their comments came after an incident earlier this week in which a man who fell out of his bunk in the police lockup was subsequently found to have suffered a concussion.

Edward McGibbon, 62, was treated at Victoria General Hospital Monday night for a cut to his head and then taken back to his cell.

McGibbon, arrested for being drunk in a public place, was released from custody the following afternoon when a bed was found for him at the Cool-Aid hostel on Fernwood.

Shortly after he arrived at the hostel, workers noticed he appeared ill and took him to hospital where his concussion was diagnosed.

He remains in hospital in satisfactory condition.

Carlow said there was nothing inappropriate with the treatment McGibbon received when he was first brought to hospital.

"There is always a risk in discharging a person who has suffered a blow to the head," he said.

"But I'm satisfied the (emergency room) doctor made a correct decision."

Using police cells is at best a stop-gap measure, he said.

Deputy Smith said 100 or more drunks are picked up monthly in the city. While the law no longer makes being drunk an offence, police have the authority to keep those arrested overnight or until they sober up.

Smith said the detoxification centre on McClure Street is the only alternative but it can't cope with "out-and-out drunks."

New city rink ready to roll

The disco roller rink will open Boxing Day at 966 Yates, once the site of a bowling alley and lately an auction house.

The last roller palace here closed in the 1950s, became a warehouse and is now a building supply outlet on Douglas.

Heinekey, 30, borrowed $60,000 on the strength of her inventory of 200 pairs of rental skates and with help from her friends saved $20,000 on materials by recycling wood from the auction house to renovate the building.

Nearly 7,000 square feet of floor is coated with polyurethane plastic, the same material used for wheels on skateboards and indoor-outdoor roller skates.

Heinekey says the plastic finish is resilient, non-skid and less likely to cause abrasions in falls.

The building has new lighting, a sound system and murals painted by some well-known illustrators.

Boys try for purse

Two 14-year-old boys will get a visit from city police in connection with an attempted purse-snatching on Alder Street near Reed Thursday afternoon.

Police said Phyllis Ellwell was walking to her home at 3170 Alder at 3:50 p.m. when two youths grabbed her and tried to wrestle her purse out of her arm.

The woman held on and the youths fled.

However, an unidentified woman witnessed the attack and gave police the address of a nearby house the youths entered.

New plan for old theatre

"We're discussing it. It's looking closer than it ever has," Jack Tomik, district manager of Famous Players Ltd. in Vancouver said today.

He was asked to comment on reports in the city that the theatre is to be demolished by Jan. 31.

"The company has had some drawings made of the new project and that's about where it's sitting now," he said.

Early in the new year the board of directors of Famous Players will make a decision on the project, Tomik added.

The local theatre manager said Thursday there have been plans going back as far as 1949 for redevelopment of the theatre, a red brick structure which was built in 1920.

The last major plan was for an office-apartment block in 1973.

Christmas cut for 17 pilots

West Coast Air Services Ltd. has laid off 17 pilots — almost half its force — as an economic measure, the company said today.

Company president Al Michaud said the layoff was due to poor economic conditions.

He said the company normally lays off a few pilots over the winter but this is the highest total in recent years.

The company retains 21 pilots on staff.

Michaud said the layoff is not related in any way to a bid by Airwest Airlines to buy the firm. Airwest has also laid off a couple of pilots as part of its normal winter pattern.

Michaud said the pilots have been informed they will be considered for re-hiring if economic conditions improve in the spring.

The proposed purchase of West Coast must be approved by the air transport committee of the Canadian Transportation Commission before it can proceed.

The Jim Pattison Group is offering to buy up a large number of coastal air services and plans to merge them into one company. Its purchase of Airwest has already been approved.

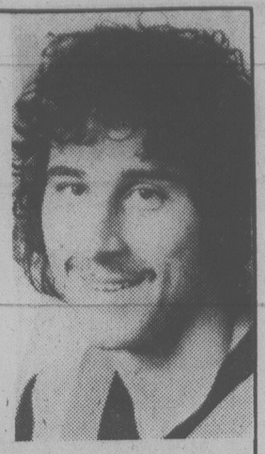

Surplus hoarding hit

Victoria NDP MLA Gordon Hanson said Thursday the provincial government should spend part of its surplus to relieve the emergency situation at Royal Jubilee Hospital.

Hanson said a lack of acute-care beds has left 1,200 people waiting for surgery and some of the cases are serious.

He says the callousness of the government is beyond belief when it reports a surplus of $188 million for the first six months of the fiscal year and does not provide funds to alleviate the serious problem at RJH.

Sedlbauer to Chicago

RON SEDLBAUER

VANCOUVER (CP) — Left winger Ron Sedlbauer was sent to Chicago Black Hawks today by Vancouver Canucks in return for two players in a National Hockey League trade.

Sedlbauer, 25, had 10 goals in 32 games this season for Vancouver, down from 22 goals at the same time the previous year. His 40 goals last season set a club single-season record.

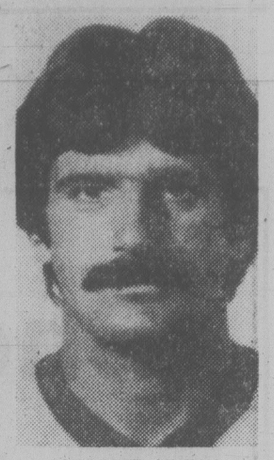

Logan, 25, currently is playing for the Canadian Selects at the Izvestia tournament in Moscow. He appeared in 12 games for Chicago this season with two goals and three assists, plus 34 penalty minutes.

The Canucks have been seeking defensive help since the start of the season and coach Harry Neale was critical of his defenders Wednesday in New York following a 5-3 loss to the Rangers.

Phillipoff, 23 and a graduate of New Westminster Bruins, is coming off an ankle injury which has limited his playing time with the Hawks to just nine games this season. He didn't have a point in Chicago.

The Canucks hold a two-point lead over Chicago in the battle for first place in the Smythe Division.

Simmer rolls on; Flyers tie record

CHARLIE SIMMER
. . . 11th straight

Times News Services

To say Charlie Simmer came out of nowhere to become a star in the National Hockey League this season would be a gross understatement.

Simmer, 25, who could not crack the Los Angeles Kings' lineup at training camp last season, has made the grade in a big way — he's the first National Hockey League player to score 30 goals this season and his latest goal, Thursday night, extended a consecutive-game scoring streak to 11.

It's been nearly 60 years since any NHL shooter has flashed the red light behind the opposition's net that many games in a row. The record is 16 by Harry (Punch) Broadbent of the Ottawa Senators in the 1921-22 season. Joe Malone of Montreal Canadiens went 14 games in 1917-18, Newsy Lalonde scored in 13 consecutive games in 1920-21, Cy Denneny of Ottawa Senators had a 12-game streak in 1917-18 and Babe Dye scored in 11 games in a row in 1920-21 and again in 1921-22.

Simmer converted his own rebound in the first period of the Kings' 5-3 loss to Buffalo Sabres.

Prior to the game, Simmer had been tied at 10 consecutive games with Andy Bathgate (New York Rangers 1962-63), Bobby Hull (Chicago Black Hawks 1968-69) and Mike Bossy (New York Islanders 1978-79).

Simmer scored at least one goal in the last five games of last season and the first six of this, but for record purposes the NHL does not carry over streaks from one season to the next.

The goal came with 12:21 in the opening period and tied the score 1-1.

"I didn't know it was a record," the Buffalo goalie said. "I was wondering why they were applauding."

Simmer, who had scored only 32 goals in parts of five previous seasons in the NHL, teams with right winger Taylor and centre Marcel Dionne on the highest-scoring line in the league.

Simmer now stands third among NHL scoring leaders, adding 26 assists to his league-high 30 goals for 56 points. Dionne has 65 points and Guy Lafleur of Montreal Canadiens 58.

The Boston Garden is regarded by visiting teams as one of the most difficult NHL rinks in which to escape with a point and that's where Philadelphia Flyers will find themselves Saturday afternoon as they attempt to set a new league record by playing their 29th consecutive game without a loss.

The Flyers tied the record of 28, set by the 1977-78 Montreal Canadiens, with Thursday's 1-1 draw against Pittsburgh Penguins.

And if the Flyers needed a reminder of how formidable their task will be Saturday, the Bruins warmed up the Garden crowd with a 10-0 romp over Toronto Maple Leafs in the only other Thursday game.

Pittsburgh coach Johnny Wilson said the Flyers' goal, which came on a power play, was kicked in, not hit with a stick.

"He (Wilson) kicked it in," said Wilson. "The referee (Dave Newell) was standing there watching him (Wilson)."

Wilson, who had scored one goal this season entering the game, contested Wilson's kicking charge.

"I pushed it in with my stick," said the Flyers' defenceman.

Philadelphia coach Pat Quinn, smoking his usual cigar, said tying the record was not important.

"I'm happy about it," he said. "But the only thing that is important is to win at the end of the season. That's how the players get measured. That's how I get measured. The important thing is win the Stanley Cup."

Ballard changes mind, charity game in limbo

TORONTO (CP) — Harold Ballard says he has changed his mind and will not allow his Toronto Maple Leafs to play an exhibition game against a Soviet Union team next season.

Ballard had reluctantly agreed Wednesday to the players' demands for a game against a touring Soviet team in return for their agreement to play a charity game against the Canadian Olympic team.

Players on the National Hockey League club had objected to the charity game because it would have meant they would play four games in six days.

The Leafs balked again Thursday when it became known that the Olympic team had rejected a Leafs players' request that the teams switch goalies and defencemen for the Feb. 6 charity game.

Ballard retaliated by telling lawyer Alan Eagleson, who represented the players, that he would not allow a game against a Soviet team next year.

The Maple Leaf Gardens owner, who has always objected to exhibition games against touring Soviet clubs, had said Wednesday, even after agreeing to the match, that he might find some means to avoid it. "There's more than one way to skin a cat," said Ballard. "Maybe I'll put the cost of the seats at such a prohibitive price no one will be able to come and the game will be called off."

Pederson hops to third in WHL scoring parade

Two of the top three marksmen in the Western Hockey League will line up on opposite firing lines Saturday night when Portland Winter Hawks play host to Victoria Cougars.

A 14-point scoring outburst in four games has carried Tim Tookey of Portland into a tie for first place in the scoring race.

Tookey, drafted last summer by Washington Capitals of the National League, added six goals and eight assists to raise his total for the year to 70 points, including 40 assists. The 19-year-old centre is tied with Regina Pats' Doug Wickenheiser, who leads the league in goals with 35.

Barry Pederson of the Cougars, also showing a hot hand in recent weeks, has climbed to third place with 67 points on 27 goals and 40 assists.

Fifth-place Jim Dobson and 11th-place Florent Robidoux have also figured highly the Winter Hawks' recent surge, which has seen the team win its last eight games to move within six points of the front-running Cougars.

Wickenheiser saw his 28-game point-getting streak end last week when he was given a game misconduct early in the first period against Great Falls.

Grant Fuhr and Kevin Eastman of Victoria hold the lead among goaltenders with a combined goals-against average of 2.91. Fuhr leads the league at 2.53.

In league play Thursday, Brad Kempthorne scored a power play goal 11 seconds into the third period and Medicine Hat Tigers went on to defeat Brandon Wheat Kings 5-3 before 1,625 Brandon fans.

Kempthorne's goal gave the Tigers a 4-2 lead and proved to be the winner. Stewart Robertson scored the insurance goal near the midway mark of the period to wrap the game up.

Brandon held a territorial edge in play but Medicine Hat goaltender Kelly Hrudey had an outstanding game. He blocked 46 shots, 22 more than Wheat King netminder Scott Olson.

Fringe player but producing

LAKE PLACID, N.Y. (AP) — Coach Herb Brooks of the United States Olympic hockey team has made it clear he dreads the approach of Feb. 1. That's the day he'll have to cut his squad to the 20 players that will compete at the Winter Olympic Games.

And it's no secret that left winger Ralph Cox is one player who may become a victim of the numbers game. Brooks lists Cox as the 13th forward on a roster that will include only 12 for the Games.

"I'll be candid with you because I'm not talking behind anyone's back," Brooks said. "He'll have to work very hard. He has weaknesses, and the question is whether this club is strong enough to carry him with those weaknesses."

Cox, still recovering from a broken bone in his right ankle, showed few weaknesses Thursday night. He took a pass from Mike Christoff and sent a 15-foot shot past goalie Karel Lang early in the first period to start the American Olympic team to a 3-0 triumph over Czechoslovakia at the pre-Olympic tournament.

The triumph, the Americans' third in as many games at this five-country round-robin tournament, assured them of the best record of the competition, with a game remaining against the Soviet Union on Saturday night.

The Soviet squad will carry a 1-2 record into the match, having lost to Sweden 4-2 in the second game of Thursday's doubleheader.

The 22-year-old Cox admits a skating deficiency.

How much longer he will be on the ice — for the Olympians, anyway — depends on his performance in the remaining exhibitions. So far here, the Americans' performance has seemed quite satisfactory: They rallied for victories over Sweden and Canada, and got Cox's goal at 2:51 of the first period in the victory over the Czechoslovaks.

Snelling and Parker grab bowling awards

Keith Snelling and Linda Parker, both competing at Mayfair Lanes, topped tenpin brackets during the 11th week of competition in the 17th annual Times Bowler-of-the-Week contest.

Keith nailed down men's laurels with a 215-236-191 — 642 series in the Victoria Senior League while Linda collected women's honors with a 252-131-240 — 623 series in the Ladies Commercial League.

In addition to earning weekly awards, Keith and Linda are also qualified to compete in the season-end Bowler-of-the-Year rolloffs.

Bowlers competing in regular league play on the south end of Vancouver Island take a two-week Christmas break starting Saturday morning before resuming competition in the contest Jan. 5.

Selmon voted top defender

Lee Roy Selmon, the pivotal figure in the Tampa Bay Buccaneers' emergence as the National Football League's No. 1 defensive team, was named Thursday in New York as the defensive player of the year by The Associated Press.

Jim Haslett, who stepped in as a starting linebacker with Buffalo Bills when Tom Cousineau trotted off to Canada, was named the defensive rookie of the year.

Selmon, a 6-foot-3, 255-pound defensive end on the Bucs' 3-4 defence, was a runaway winner, receiving 38 of the 84 votes cast by sports writers and broadcasters, three from each NFL city.

Mike Reinfeldt, the Houston Oilers free safety, was second with 10 votes, followed by middle linebacker Jack Lambert of Pittsburgh Steelers with eight.

Haslett, an inside linebacker in the Bills' 3-4 defence, was named on 25 of the 84 ballots.

Linebacker Jerry Robinson of Philadelphia Eagles received 17 votes and defensive tackle Dan Hampton of Chicago Bears received 16 as Haslett's closest challengers.

Haslett, a 6-foot-3, 230-pound native and resident of Pittsburgh, stepped into an unusually difficult situation. The Bills' No.1 choice — and the NFL's — was Cousineau, an All-American linebacker out of Ohio State, and he got all the publicity, especially after he scorned Buffalo's contract and accepted one from Montreal Alouettes of the Canadian Football League.

Canadians get a point

The Canadian team had lost its three earlier games against Czechoslovakia, Sweden and the Soviet Union.

The Soviet Union, as may have been expected, is grumbling about the Canadian team, a mixture of fringe professionals and Olympic team amateurs.

After the Selects suffered a 10-1 loss to Czechoslovakia in the tournament opener, the news agency Tass said the Canadian team could not be called a national team like the other four tournament entries.

Finland, Czechoslovakia, Sweden and the leading Soviet Union are represented here by their top teams who, with only minor lineup changes, will play in the Winter Olympics at Lake Placid in February.

After the Canada Selects' 7-2 loss to Sweden, Tass accused the Canadians of being rude players, lacking self control, and pointed to the fact Canada led the tournament in penalties.

But after the Canadians made a respectable showing in a 5-2 loss to the Soviet Union on Wednesday, the newspaper Pravda gave grudging recognition to the Canada Selects defence which held the home team in check early in the game.

Finland defeated Sweden 4-2 Thursday night, securing at least a third-place finish.

Trio rally trips Gulls

Oak Bay Trios climbed to within one point of runner-up Fuller Lake Flyers by rebounding for a 10-8 victory over Juan de Fuca Gulls in a South Vancouver Island Junior "B" Hockey League game Thursday at Oak Bay Recreation Centre.

Joe Miller led the way for Trios with three goals, Geoff Courtnall added two and singles were contributed by Bill Hayman, Gary Carruthers, Ken Buna, Helmut Hillert and Gordie Marshall. Ross Anderson (2), Mike Adamek, Terry Coughlan, Dan Donely, Rick Milligan, Tim Bowlier and Dan Houston answered for Flyers.

Jay Longpre made 35 saves in goal for Trios, who trailed 3-0 after the first period but had knotted the score 5-5 after the second frame. Mike Spitiri and Scott Bumfrey combined for 39 stops in the Juan de Fuca net.

Canadians hot in practice runs

Times News Services

Canadians and Erik Haker of Norway dominated today's final practice run at Schladming, Austria, for the World Cup downhill ski race Saturday.

But Austrian team officials said several top skiers, including Peter Mueller and Italian Herbert Plank, did not go full speed.

Organizers won the team coaches' approval of one practice run instead of two scheduled heats in order to keep the track in good shape for the race.

Dave Murray of Abbotsford set fast training time today, covering the 3,510 metre-long Planai course, with a vertical drop of 997 metres, in two minutes 1.99 seconds.

Runner-up Haker was clocked in 2:02.32 and Ken Read of Calgary clocked 2:02.65.

Steve Podborski of Toronto was fifth in 2:02.85.

Murray predicted the course would be faster for the race. "To win will take a time of less than two minutes. That means it's going to be a really wild ride."

Read, who won a World Cup downhill on this course last year, noted it was the first time the Canadian team has as strong in training.

"Our poor race results in the first two races came after Steve's... I had good training times," said Read. "I think we can attribute our poor race results to other factors than our skiing. At Val d'Isere, we both fell and at Val Gardena it now is well known that we had terrible luck with the wax."

Meanwhile, Laurie Graham, home from the European ski slopes for Christmas in Inglewood, Ont., finds herself the centre of newfound attention.

"It's exciting," Canada's latest entry to the top circle of World Cup ski racers, said in an interview Thursday. "You think of people at home that you know that are rooting for you and it feels good to represent a whole country over ..."

Graham, 19, is in her third year with Canada's ski team. She gained prominence earlier this month when she finished third in a downhill race at Val d'Isere, France, after starting from the 41st position.

In the second World Cup downhill of the ski season, at Piancavallo, Italy, she finished seventh. Her latest entry was at Zell Am See, Austria, on Wednesday where she finished 10th.

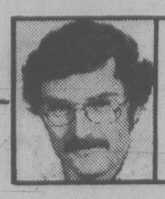

The top-10 placings have given Canada's women's team the same type of respect on the World Cup circuit this country's men's team has enjoyed for the last two years.

Limit catches in few areas provide relief to fishermen

Despite the wind and rain, a few ardent salmon fishermen are connecting with limit catches in some spots around the south end of Vancouver Island.

Steelheaders, however, might have to postpone any trips until river levels recede.

Sooke fishermen have been finding limit catches of chinooks from four to 12 pounds off Sectretary Island and the Sooke Bluffs. Best results were noted on green and white or blue, yellow and white hootchies trolled with two pounds of weight and 100 to 125 feet of line.

Bob Vink topped the catch at Becher Bay in recent days with a 15-pounder landed Tuesday off the Bedfords. Beechey Head has also been good and limit catches were reported in both areas by trollers and driftfishermen working all depths.

Pedder Bay fishermen are landing some limits in several areas. Nick Day of Hinton, Alta., landed a 19-pounder Wednesday on strip off Bentinck Island, a Mr. Storreland boated a 19½-pounder Tuesday in Whirl Bay and Eric Grubert has been limiting out just about every day.

Hootchies and bait have worked equally well and some catches were picked up right in Pedder Bay.

Fishermen working the Victoria waterfront have been boating some good catches, topped by Ken Jones' 31-pounder taken Tuesday between Saxe Point and Albert Head on strip.

With the exception of a few five-pound chinooks taken off Trial Island, fishing has been slow at Oak Bay.

Only the bigger boats have been getting out at Sidney and Ara Heinen managed to pick up the biggest catch — 9:04 and 5 — while trolling strip Wednesday off the north side of Knapp Island. Other fair catches were reported using hootchies or bait at the 130-foot depth near the red can buoy between Sidney Island and James Island.

"Not too much action" was the word from Deep Cove but a few small chinooks are showing off Bamberton and Coles Bay.

Finlayson Arm waters are yielding numerous limits of chinooks. Most of the catches have been up to 12 pounds but Gordon Randall came up with the exception when he hauled in a 21½-pounder on a plug Monday near Goldstream Island.

Squirts and plugs are working and fishing is reported to be "fantastic".

Further up-Island, fishermen have picked up chinooks to 12 pounds off Bold Bluff and in Sansum Narrows.

Nanaimo and Port Alberni areas are reported to be quiet but a few chinooks to 14 pounds are showing in Comox Bay. Driftfishermen and trollers using fresh-raked herring are doing best.

Strip, hootchies, plugs and bucktails are all nailing chinooks to 20 pounds in Duncan Bay and Menzies Bay near Campbell River.

Expos selected team-of-the-year

By The Canadian Press

Montreal Expos, who wound up not winning anything except the adoration of thousands of Canadian baseball fans in 1979, are the runaway choice as Canada's team-of-the-year.

The Expos' stirring battle with Pittsburgh Pirates in the National League East Division race earned the Montreal team almost half the first-place votes in the annual year-end poll of sports writers and sportscasters conducted by The Canadian Press.

A surprise second in the poll were Vancouver Whitecaps, who knocked off former champion New York Cosmos on the way to the North American Soccer League title.

Montreal Canadiens, who won their fourth consecutive National Hockey League title and were named team-of-the-year the last two years, finished third in the balloting. The Grey Cup champion Edmonton Eskimos were fourth.

The Expos, who also were named team-of-the-year in 1973, held the attention of Canadian baseball fans through most of the summer. A loser through 10 previous seasons, the Montreal club took over first place in its division June 12 and widened its lead to as much as 6½ games as it stayed on top through July and early August.

After dropping behind, the Expos came back in early September to battle the Pirates until the final day of the season, with the lead changing hands six times in a two-week period.

One day during that stretch, Expos manager Dick Williams received a telegram from an Ottawa fan which read: "The Pirates have a city of supporters. You, sir, have an entire nation behind you."

In the end, the Expos lost their last game, the Pirates won theirs and went on to claim the World Series. But it was a season the Expos and their fans will not soon forget.

The team finished with a winning average for the first time in its 11 seasons — 95 wins, 65 losses, a .594 average and just two games behind Pittsburgh in the final standings.

Expos claimed team-of-the-year honors with 56 first-place votes, 44 seconds and 15 thirds from 128 ballots cast.

The Whitecaps, who shocked the North American soccer community by knocking off the defending champion Cosmos in the semi-finals before winning the league title 2-1 over Tampa Bay Rowdies, were second in the voting with 34 firsts, 31 seconds and 30 thirds.

Montreal Canadiens were picked first on 23 ballots, second on 28 and third on 30 to finish third over all.

The Eskimos collected 12 votes for first place, 15 for second and 31 for third.

Match postponed

Poor field conditions have forced Vancouver Island Soccer League officials to postpone a scheduled exhibition match Saturday between President's and Vice-President's sides at Royal Athletic Park.

Oak Bay, Belmont battered in openers

NANAIMO — Both entries from the Greater Victoria area were battered in opening-round action at Nanaimo's Christmas Classic high school boys' basketball tournament Thursday.

Nanaimo Islanders lived up to their No. 1 provincial ranking by tripping Oak Bay Bays 98-48 while Steveston Packers beat Belmont Braves, 107-76.

Dave Brown scored 20 points and Dan Steffes added 15 for Nanaimo, which held a 44-25 lead at half time. Jeff Loukes topped the Bays with 12 points.

Al Cole was Belmont's best with 18 points.

In other games, Cowichan Thunderbirds beat Campbell River Tyees 95-52 and will face Packers in a semi-final game tonight while G.P. Vanier Towhees of Courtenay bounced back from a 35-30 half-time deficit to down Vancouver College 85-65 and earn the right to meet Islanders in the other semi.

Home fans, Knicks' coach irked by pie-tossing game

By The Canadian Press

Guard Lloyd Free scored 32 points and centre Swen Nater had 24 points and 17 rebounds Thursday to lead San Diego Clippers to a 128-118 win over New York Knicks in a National Basketball Association game delayed 50 minutes because of a pie-throwing promotion at halftime.

The promotion was called "Throw a pie at Ted Leitner," and the delay was caused by the lengthy clean-up needed after a group of local sports celebrities and 50 spectators chosen from the stands threw pies at the San Diego television sports personality.

New York coach Red Holzman filed an official protest because of the conditions. The announcement of the protest, shortly before the second half began, drew a cheer from the crowd of 6,843 at the San Diego Sports Arena.

"The referees feel that they have to try to play," said Holzman, in response to a question about a possible forfeit. "I've never seen anything like this before. It's not my responsibility, I didn't throw those pies."

In other games, Milwaukee Bucks defeated Kansas City Kings 120-109 and Atlanta Hawks downed Detroit Pistons 122-103.

Junior Bridgeman erupted for 17 of his 23 points in the second half as home-court Milwaukee regained the Midwest Division lead from Kansas City and snapped the Kings' eight-game win streak. Scott Wedman and Otis Birdsong led Kansas City with 24 points apiece.

Rider catch 'good omen'

REGINA (CP) — The appointment of Jim Spavital as the new general manager of Saskatchewan Roughriders was "a good omen right from the start," say Gord Staseson, president of the Canadian Football League club.

Spavital, an assistant coach with Calgary Stampeders for the last three seasons, was officially named general manager of the Roughriders on Wednesday.

His return to Regina, where he assisted Eagle Keys during first-place seasons in 1968 and 1969, was apparently in the cards.

Spavital played with Los Angeles Dons of the American Football Conference, Baltimore Colts of the National Football League and Winnipeg Blue Bombers of the CFL. He coached in high school ranks for two years and at the college level with his alma mater, Oklahoma State, for seven years. Before going to Calgary, he coached Winnipeg for four years after his two years with Saskatchewan.

"When we flew him in Tuesday, we got him in on the last available seat to Regina until after the Christmas rush," said Staseson.

Staseson said the negotiations, which began almost immediately, "were initiated by Jim."

"He phoned us and told us he was definitely interested in the job if we were interested in him." The Roughrider answer was an emphatic "yes."

"We've been good friends for years," said Lancaster. "I think we'll work really well together.

"But I want to make it very clear that Jim is the boss — he's in charge of the football team and the talent. I'll be working with what he gives me."

With Spavital's departure from the Stampeder staff, recently-appointed Calgary head coach Ardell Wiegandt will have to hit the coaching recruitment trail immediately to find a replacement.

Anybody who knew old "Cappy" Beaumont and his beloved Discovery Island will be glad to hear that provincial officials are now planning to restore some sort of order.

Thousands of youngsters knew the joy of visiting the gentle captain during the 49 years he lived on the island. He died in 1967, aged 91, and since then his old home and other buildings on the island have been literally torn apart by waterborne vandals.

The provincial government proclaimed the 150 acres on Discovery a provincial park on July 27, 1972. It is one of three parks given to the people by "Cappy." He also donated a 513-acre marine park at Bedwell Harbor on South Pender Island and a 350-acre-park on Fraser Lake, east of Prince George.

Being so assessible, Discovery Island is a ready target for unthinking vandals. The buildings have now reached the point where they are a fire hazard and should be torn down before someone gets hurt.

Provincial authorities face this fact reluctantly and are anxious to get some input on how boaters feel about erecting a more permanent token to the captain's generosity, such as a stone cairn.

I've promised to pass on any suggestions the public has on this so, please, let me have any ideas you may have in mind. Personally, a stone cairn, with a suitable legend, sounds good to me.

The official report on this year's disastrous Fastnet Race makes fascinating, in fact, frightening reading. Jim McVie, who was over in Britain, as usual, to take pictures of the Admiral's Cup racing, loaned me his copy this week.

Prepared for the Royal Yachting Association and the Royal Ocean Racing Club, it catalogues unbelievable sea conditions and faults liferafts, safety harnesses and other gear that proved inadequate under the pummelling of 40-foot waves.

In terse language it describes some of the horrors the competitors faced. For example, it tells what happened to a boat in which two people died after being trapped in the cockpit of an inverted boat.

During the early hours of Aug. 14, the boat was running under bare poles, having been knocked down several times. The crew spent most of the night in the cockpit. Having gone down below to make a distress call, the skipper was hit on the head by some loose gear, probably a tin of food. He kept lapsing into unconsciousness.

The boat was rolled through 180 degrees and remained upside down for what crewmen described as between two and five minutes. Two of the crew were thrown clear, remaining attached by their harnesses. A third crewman cut the skipper's harness to extricate him but after bringing him to the surface he lost his grip on the skipper, who was washed away.

One of the three crewmen in the water climbed onto the upturned hull. The boat then righted herself, dismasted.

All three climbed back on board to find two crew members who had been trapped in the cockpit during the capsize. They were lying motionless and believed dead.

The three were subsequently rescued by helicopter.

One of the unconscious casualties revived some time later in the water alongside the hull. It appears the boat may have capsized again when he was unconscious. He climbed back on board and, using a winch, pulled his semi-conscious companion back into the boat.

His companion was still alive, responded to reuscitation but died about 45 minutes later.

The remaining survivor spent some 12 hours bailing out the boat before being lifted off by helicopter.

The report is hardly holiday reading material but should prove helpful in improving standards for liferafts and other emergency gear.

Horton back with Mariners

SEATTLE (AP) — Seattle Mariners and Willie Horton, the American Baseball League's Outstanding Designated Hitter for 1979, have come to terms on a three-year contract.

Horton also had been chosen by New York Yankees, Baltimore Orioles, Kansas City Royals and Oakland A's when he went through the free agent re-entry draft.

Maryland allows limited lasix use

BALTIMORE (AP) — The thoroughbred board of the Maryland Racing Commission voted Tuesday to permit the use of lasix on a limited basis, and to delay implementation of its tougher medication rules from Jan. 1 to March 15.

The decision came after horsemen asked for a 120-day cooling-off period and implied that they would boycott state tracks if they were unable to halt the proposed ban of lasix and bute at the start of the new year.

Blades, Athletics skate to victory

Duncan Silver Park Blades and Victoria Athletics posted decisive victories Thursday during South Island Big Six Hockey League play at Pearkes Arena.

Blades downed Western Homes Buckaroos 7-3 while Athletics tripped Juan de Fuca Merchants, 5-1.

Larry Steinhaur and Harold Neufrer scored two goals each to spark the Blades while singles were added by Terry Ellison, Ted Grant and Doug Lafleur. Doug Berger, Pat Finner and Norm Allen replied for Bucks.

Dave Wright blocked 35 shots on the Buckaroo goal and Vic Malli made 37 saves for Blades, who held a 4-2 lead going into the final 20 minutes.

Dan Peck, Graham Brown, Gord Neilson, Kevin Kennedy and Bruce Cowick scored for Athletics and Steve Berry averted a shutout for Merchants.

Fadeout for free Fords

DETROIT (AP) — The curtain may fall on the 39-year run of Ford cars in the movies and on television.

Ford Motor Co. spokesmen confirmed today that to save money, the company may stop giving free use of cars to producers in exchange for the visibility involved.

Ford cars have appeared in such TV series as Charlie's Angels, The FBI and The Streets of San Francisco. Steve McQueen drove one in the chase scene in the movie Bullitt.

Ford could not say how much money it would save by giving up the practice, which would be part of a general belt-tightening. As far as possible, Ford has sold the cars after the TV and movie producers were done with them.

$15M award to 4th wife

NEW YORK (AP) — The fourth wife of Charles Lachman, co-founder of the Revlon cosmetics empire, was awarded an estimated $15 million from her late husband's $30-million estate on Thursday. Jaquine Lachman also got possession of a luxury duplex in Manhattan. The rest of the estate was shared among Lachman's three daughters and some charities.

Father's a charming Christmas choice

By AUDREY JOHNSON

It isn't pantomime and it isn't fantasy, although the kind of family life portrayed in Life With Father might well be considered fantasy by modern audiences.

But it is definitely family entertainment if only by virtue of its language; the sole four-letter word in the entire show is 'damn' — a rarity indeed.

For this holiday season Bastion Theatre has made an excellent choice in the Howard Lindsay-Russel Crouse golden oldie among stage comedies.

Life With Father has less substance than its contemporaries, You Can't Take It With You and The Man Who Came to Dinner but it is still charming and highly amusing — a sort of comedy of manners of home life before the turn of the century.

Ron Ulrich's production for Bastion is a lively spoof of the typical tyrannical father, the sweet but financially clueless mother and the glossy-mannered children of the period.

Audiences of all ages will undoubtedly love every minute of it and even at this moment as it is poised for tonight's official opening, box office pre-sales indicate that Father may well establish a Bastion all-time record.

Designer Art Penson's set provides the production with much of its reality and period credibility. It is complete in every detail of a wealthy American home of the period, from the frescoed ceiling to the graceful but sturdy staircase, the sliding glass doors and draped mantel. When people mount the stairs you know there are rooms above just as you can envision the below-stair kitchen quarters and other parts of the Victorian mansion.

He is also the designer of the considerable wardrobe and for once the boys' and men's suits are convincing and properly fitted and the women look charmingly corsetted and cumbered.

Margaret Martin as the unflappable cook is absolutely first-rate. Susan Gillatt's teen-aged Mary is among the more convincing performances; the succession of maids — Valerie Drake, Christina Robinson, Gloria Evanoff and Rhoda McKinney — all handle their brief moments well.

Clara Hare brings a warm, hearty and comfortable presence to her two appearances and like Martin, leaves you with the wish to see more of her.

As for the boys, they come awfully close to stealing the show from everyone else. Carl Ritchie as the oldest son, Clarence, has presence, poise, a full understanding of the character. He never for a moment comes out of the frame but maintains the portrait and its relationship to the other players.

Andrew Sabiston is quite outstanding as his enterprising brother John and David Lepard and Ricky MacBride are fine as the two youngest members of the family.

These are the most completely convincing characterizations. Sheila Junor-Moore's Vinnie is elegant and charming. She is at her best in her mothering of the youngsters but her financial inadequacy strikes one as quite phoney. (Possibly director Ulrich sees it that way).

At any rate, she presents the idea that she is quite too intelligent for the doll-house role or to be at all taken in by the kind of husband portrayed by Jack Northmore.

Northmore consistently overplays Father, making him seem a fool, which he certainly was not originally intended to be. What should be an obtuse but warm and very human person comes out as a mountebank and an ass. It's a case of caricature, not character.

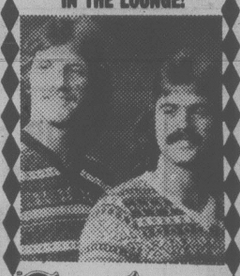

Another caricature is offered by Robin Marshall as the Episcopalian minister who conspires with Vinnie to conjure Father into baptism. The role could be sufficiently comic if played straight. The lampoon is needless.

It's a season for laughter however, and this is a production that will provide it in hearty doses.

He's hard put to strut stuff

He was discovered at age 17 by Alan Lund, artistic director of the festival, to play Gilbert in Anne of Green Gables. He stuck with it from 1968 to 1971, moved out and came to Toronto where his work, in such productions as television's Pig 'n' Whistle, proved anonymous.

Now Hyslop, 28, is back in Toronto — after three years on the road in A Chorus Line — to headline The Tin Soldier and the National Tap Dance Company mixed program at the St. Lawrence Centre.

Ironically, it was his Canadian citizenship that robbed him of spending more time with A Chorus Line.

Picked from Toronto auditions, he opened in the show's international company and then travelled with it for six months in London and then in a top-notch United States touring group.

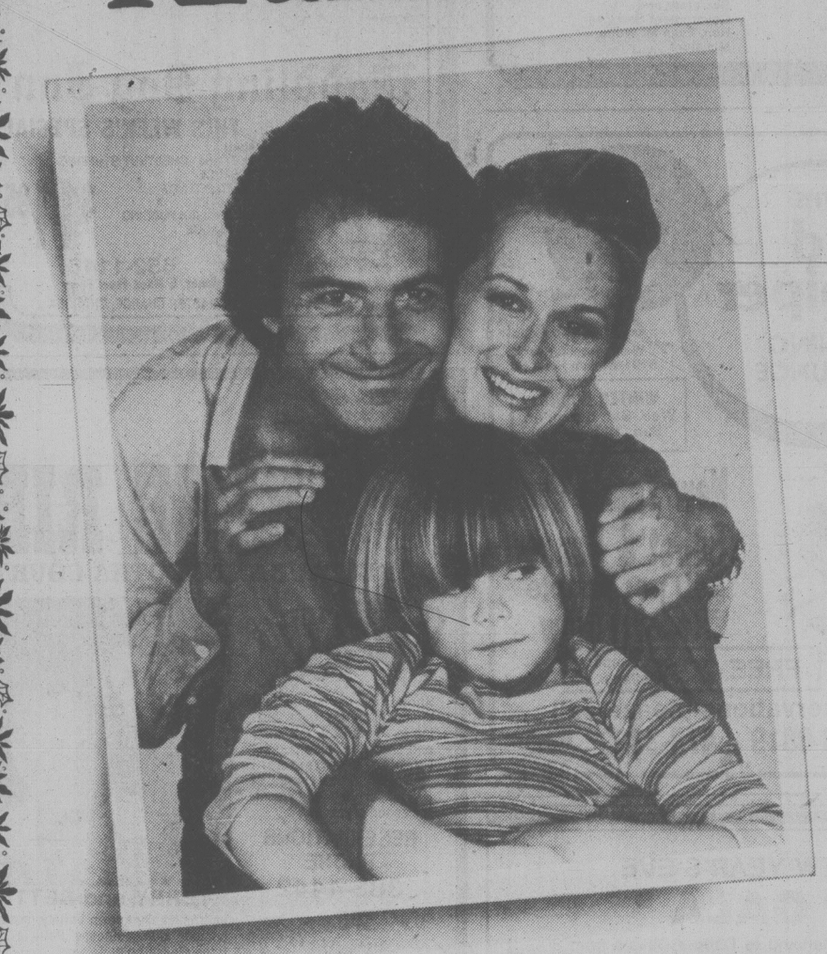

"I had just begun what was to have been six months in the Broadway company when U.S. immigration revoked my temporary visa," he said.

"It already had been renewed three times and immigration said A Chorus Line is not a permanent employment situation; it is bound to close some day."

Hyslop returned to his home in Vancouver with his wife, singer Ruth Nichol, and their one-year-old daughter. CBC Television variety chief Jack McAndrew, who produced the Charlottetown Festival during Hyslop's years there, hired him as a featured dancer on The Raes pop music series.

Soaper beckons many but few chosen

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — The word went out that 16 new cast members are being sought for the soap opera The Young and the Restless, currently rated No. 1 among daytime dramas.

Producer John Conboy is expanding the 30-minute series to a full hour and needs the services of a bunch of young actors, mostly in their teens and early 20s to make the expansion possible.

The opportunities the show represents for young performers is irresistible — a generous weekly paycheque, national exposure and hard-to-get experience.

Now in its sixth year, The Young and the Resltess provides its performers with a built-in, loyal audience.

Conboy has interviewed 150 youthful actors and hasn't come close to filling any of the roles. He expects to see 500 others before he completes casting.

He is hampered by the fact that some teen-age roles must be played by actors 18 or older who must look 15 or 16 to get around California child labor laws.

For every young actor and actress he interviews, another one or two are screened out by his casting associates. Conboy, a former actor himself, knows about rejection. But he can't allow compassion or sentiment to enter his thinking.

"There must be thousands of young actors in the 18-to-25 age bracket," Conboy said during a break in a full day of interviewing prospective stars. "Because they haven't any track record I depend on a trick to cast young, inexperienced people.

"I study their off-screen personalities. If they really turn on, light a fire, express themselves well and excitingly in my office, then I know they'll do the same thing on camera.

"When I was producing another soap opera back in New York — Love Is A Many Splendored Thing, I hired Paul Michael Glaser (later the star of Starsky and Hutch) on the basis of his off-screen personality.

"The people who come in to talk to me had better be glossy, the kind of performers who attract immediate attention.

"If viewers are going to be looking at them five days a week, they'd better be good looking as well as talented. And I expect them to be good listeners, too.

"If I were looking for experienced performers, the casting job would be a great deal easier. Established actors have done enough things to give you a pretty good idea of what they can do."

Conboy mentally eliminates most young performers the moment they enter his office. Their appearance or attitudes or both are wrong.

Those who do pass a cursory inspection often fail during the reading or screen test because "their acting technique" shows, according to Conboy who adds that too many youngsters are badly trained.

"Young people absorb bad habits from their theatrical coaches," he said. "They accumulate theatricality from teachers. Their techniques are unnatural.

"The success of The Young and The Restless is due to the fact that the kids in the series don't know how to be dishonest in front of the cameras. Also, they've discovered how much hard work goes into a soap opera.

"Casting a soap is different from other series in some respects but not in others. There are certain types that follow a pattern, especially with women.

"If I'm casting a girl from the wrong side of the tracks, she must have a big bosom because women with big chests are made to appear to be more salacious than other women.

"You rarely see a flat-chested actress playing bawdy roles. It just seems to be one of the unwritten rules of theatre, movies and television. On the other hand, uptight, puritanical women are almost always flat-chested.

"Facial beauty is an enormously important part of casting a soap opera because we shoot tight, close-in one shots of performers which show every pore of their skins. The point is to see what is going on in their eyes.

"The young men I'm looking for must be handsome or sexy looking. Like the actresses, they must have good bodies because we play as many scenes as we can in soaps with people undressed.

"We play on the fantasies of our viewers by putting our characters in settings where there are legitimate reasons for undressing — in bed, showers, hot tubs, swimming pools, karate classes or gyms.

"So we have to find young actors and actresses who are 'hot' to look at, exciting, sexy.

"In the final analysis, people who tune in soaps like to watch attactive young people. You find the same thing is pretty much true of prime time performers. I think you see better looking people on TV than in movies.

"Viewers also would rather see good looking older people than they would unattractive performers. You've got to provide fantasy if you expect viewers to tune in.

Before the judge

Preliminary hearing dates were set in provincial court Thursday for three men charged in connection with the Donut King franchising operation.

They are charged in three separate "informations" with a total of 161 counts involving an alleged $933,864.10 in transactions and have elected trial by judge without jury.

Former Victoria alderman Robert Ellis, 44, of 3773 Waring, George Sheldon Parkhurst, also 44, of 2777 Benson, and Terry Richard Strong, 34, of 343 Simcoe, were charged with conspiracy, fraud, and criminal breach of trust following a lengthy investigation by the RCMP commercial crime section in Victoria.

Ellis also faces another 31 counts allegedly involving another $143,200 dealing with West Bay Marina mortgages.

Special Crown counsel Michael Hutchison advised Judge William Ostler that defence lawyers Gordon Detwiller, for Ellis and Parkhurst, and Patrick Sweeney, for Strong, were agreeable to a three-day-a-week schedule starting June 2 and ending Sept. 4.

The first hearing, on June 2, involves charges against Parkhurst and Strong only and will take five days, Hutchison said. It will be followed by another hearing involving the same two men slated to last 12 days starting June 16. Parkhurst and Ellis will face a third hearing scheduled for 18 days starting July 14, and Ellis will be the only defendent in a six-day hearing starting Aug. 25.

A 19-year-old who was described by his lawyer as a "profoundly emotionally-disturbed young man" was given an 18-month jail term and two years probation.

Timothy Brett Staller, 2120 Ridge, pleaded guilty earlier to a Nov. 15 James Bay break-in during which a 2½-year-old cockatoo said to be worth more than $1,000 and a Cowichan sweater were taken, and five other charges from various parts of Vancouver Island. He had been held in custody for the preparation of a presentence report.

The break-in occurred at 526 Toronto and the owner of the bird placed an ad in the daily newspapers offering a reward for its return.

Crown counsel Richard Law said a man phoned the owner and set up a meeting for Nov. 20 but never came.

Staller was arrested in the Bastion pub and the bird was found at his residence. He told police he had been drinking all day, ran out of money, and broke in.

Defence lawyer Steven Kelliher said Staller was a foster child at the age of four, began drinking at nine, and was expelled from school at 11 because of alcohol use.

He said life was a continuing tragedy for Staller because of alcohol and that the long-standing, consumption of alcohol was "outside his control." He said Staller needs psychiatric care as well as compassion.

Ostler agreed it was one of many pathetic cases the court sees and that life is a continuing tragedy for Staller.

The biggest tragedy, he said, was that Staller is a confirmed and hopeless alcoholic at 19. Ostler said the young man's background engenders pity and calls out for compassion, calling Staller an "emotional cripple."

Ostler specified that the terms be served in the Newhaven institution where Staller could get pyschiatric help. He placed him on two years probation with a condition that he accept Drug and Alcohol Rehabilitation Society counselling.

He also imposed concurrent sentences of two months for an assault causing bodily harm Sept. 27 in Tahsis, and one month each concurrently for mischief causing wilful damage in the Sept. 27 incident and obtaining food by fraud from Smitty's Pancake House in Victoria on Oct. 19.

Fined for drinking-driving offences were: Spooran Singh Sundher, 42, of 3724 Raymond, $800; Douglas Raymond Mosseau, 20, no fixed address, $600; James William Noble, 21, of HMCS Gatineau, $450; Lloyd Aylmer Robinson, 22, of 4835 Tavan, $350; Eric Wilson, 34, of 10044 Cotoneaster, $250; and Gary Peter Joseph, 37, of 7596 Church, $50.

In addition, Joseph was fined $35 for driving without a valid licence and was ordered to perform 150 hours of community service work.

Monday sentencing set in 'very serious' drug case

Sentencing of a 35-year-old American in connection with Canada's second-biggest soft-drug seizure was adjourned Thursday in county court until Monday after Judge E.J.C. Stewart said he needed more time.

"This is a very serious case," he told Frank Piersanti of Chicago, whose real name is Steven Cavanaugh Manning.

"I simply haven't had a chance to consider with the care required the submissions today."

Piersanti pleaded guilty Monday to possession of marijuana for the purpose of trafficking and sentencing was set for Thursday. He was one of 15 men arrested July 15, 1978, near Tofino. Police and armed forces found 13½ tons of Colombian marijuana, said to be worth $20 million wholesale, on Obstruction Island in Shelter Inlet.

He was tried before a jury last April on three charges. Two were quashed on technical grounds and he was acquitted on the third but the prosecution immediately relaid the two quashed charges and added a new one.

One of the quashed and relaid charges was possession for the purpose of trafficking. It was quashed originally because it did not have the required consent of the attorney-general of Canada. The relaid charge contained that consent.

Crown counsel Martha McNeely told Judge Stewart that another man in the case, Frederick Charles Scott, 28, of Vancouver, was sentenced after last April's trial to four years for possession of marijuana for the purpose of trafficking. Scott had criminal convictions for trafficking in a narcotic and possession of a restricted drug for the purpose of trafficking.

She said Piersanti was sentenced in New Brunswick in 1976 to 3½ years for possession of marijuana for the purpose of trafficking. He served 14 months in jail and was paroled and deported to the United States and was not to return to Canada without permission but he had done so.

She said the involvement of Scott and Piersanti was almost the same.

Defence counsel Patrick Sweeney said there was minimal evidence against Piersanti and that indicated the degree of his involvement. The evidence included being arrested 12 miles from the marijuana cache site and the finding of traces of marijuana on his shoes.

He said Piersanti was born in Chicago and worked in his father's architectural firm as a liaison person with job sites between 1967 and 1971. For the next four years, he managed two restaurants in Chicago.

Sweeney asked Judge Stewart to consider the 17 months Piersanti has spent in Wilkinson Road jail and because this is "dead time," from which no remission can be earned, it was the equivalent of at least twice that time spent in prison after a sentence.

Scott, he said, will be eligible for release on day parole in Vernon next month, less than a year after being sentenced to four years on the same charge as Piersanti and in the same case.

Sweeney said the 17 months Piersanti has spent in custody is the equivalent of a four-year sentence, by counting it as twice the time spent after a sentence plus what could be earned in remission.

Another chance given city youth

An 18-year-old Victorian with a record of nine juvenile and three adult offences was told Thursday by county court Judge E.J.C. Stewart he'd get another opportunity to see if he can keep out of trouble.

"Otherwise, you will just be going in and out of jail," he told Gordon Raymond Portice, who pleaded guilty to auto theft Oct. 4.

Stewart noted that Portice spent two months in custody awaiting disposition of the matter.

Defence counsel Barry Mah Ming asked that the time served be considered the sentence and that Portice be required to seek psychiatric counselling.

Stewart agreed, imposing a suspended sentence and one year's probation with the condition that Portice go to a psychiatrist.

Messiah Saturday at St. Aidan's

Part I of Handel's Messiah performed in baroque style, will be presented Saturday at 8:30 p.m. by the Victoria Boys Chorus assisted by members of Christ Church Cathedral Choir at St. Aidan's United Church, 1691 Broadmead.

The performance will be accompanied by Norman Hurrle at the organ and Beal Thomas at the harpsichord.

It just wasn't Cyrus Vance's day. First, his fragile gold chair cracked in the East Room of the White House during entertainment of British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. Then, called upon to join in the singing of The Twelve Days of Christmas, he forgot the words. But he was game. He just kept singing "Six geese a-laying" over and over again.

China's deputy premier Deng Xiaoping, told Muhammad Ali in Peking that he can return to China to train young boxers for the 1984 Olympics. "He made me the official representative of the Chinese Boxing Federation," Ali said after he met with the leader for 20 minutes in the Great Hall of the People.

California authorities have arrested Karen Greenlee, 21, an apprentice embalmer, on charges of stealing a black hearse and the body inside it. Greenlee was last heard from when she notified a fellow worker at Sacramento Memorial Lawn in Sacramento that she was going to pick up a body. The hearse was halted by the Sierra County sheriff's deputies late a day later on a rural highway about 75 miles away, and Greenlee, apparently under the influence of drugs, had to be "taken by force" from the hearse.

In New Delhi, charges were filed against Sanjay Gandhi for illegal sale of iron and steel acquired for use in his failed Maruti car manufacturing project. Gandhi, 33-year-old son of former prime minister Indira Gandhi, is campaigning in northern Uttar Predesh state for next month's general election.

Don Tucker has come up with a franchise in Nashville on a gadget for the car owner who has everything — including paranoia. His "remotostart" will start a car, turn on the lights, warm up the engine, defrost windows, serve as a burglar alarm and even check out a vehicle's circuitry to determine if an assassin has attached a bomb — all while the driver is 400 feet away.

John "Johnny C" Conaghan, who reportedly supplied cocaine to White House aide Hamilton Jordan, says he peddled drugs for years at Studio 54, the Manhattan discotheque. Conaghan pleaded guilty to one charge in a 10-count indictment alleging he took part in a conspiracy to distribute narcotics.

Dear Abby:

I'm a 26-year-old single man. Last year I fell in love with a 19-year-old girl I'll call Laura. I moved in with her and everything was fine until we got into a dumb argument and I broke her nose. She kicked me out, and refused to have anything more to do with me. I really loved her and begged for another chance, but she changed her phone number and the locks on her doors.

Well, about five months later I heard that she was pregnant. I wanted to face up to the responsibility of fatherhood, but she said the baby wasn't mine, and she wanted no part of me.

After Laura had the baby, I went to the welfare people and they wouldn't tell me a thing! Not even if my name was on the baby's birth certificate.

I finally went to a lawyer to find out if I had some rights as a father. The lawyer said, 'Not as long as the mother denies that you are the father!'

Now I'm trying to prove that I'm the father. I've taken blood tests, but Laura refuses to talk to me Abby. If I'm the father, and I'm sure I am, I have as much right to be a part of that baby's life as Laura has. What can I do about it?

Denied My Rights

Dear Denied:

Only one who is thoroughly conversant with the law can tell you what your rights are. If you aren't satisfied with the lawyer you consulted, find one you think is more competent.

Dear Abby:

I am a 14-year-old boy and I think my sister is gay. She is 12 and so is her 'friend.' My sister and her friend, who is also a neighbor, are always together. They take showers and baths together, and even go to the bathroom together!

They dress alike and call each other before they leave for school in the morning to see what the other one is wearing. They go to school together and come home together.

Normal

Dear Normal:

Some girls — if they're lucky — have a best friend with whom they form a very close relationship. They're inseparable — like 'lovers,' but it's not a love affair, only a warm friendship.

Dear Abby:

I am a 25-year-old forces man stationed overseas. We're away from everything familiar and dear to us. The food is well-intended but monotonous and the nights are lonely.

Why don't people who have relatives and friends in overseas write more often? Some of us are pretty young and have never been away from home before.

I'm lucky. My people write to me often. One letter from home can make a rough day better.

Allen

Dear Allen:

I'll print your letter as a timely plea to the folks back home. Readers?

Tots keep up with Jones'

By PAT DUFOUR

One: Not all couples can both live and work together.

Two: There are few qualified male daycare workers.

Three: It is not easy occupying young lives while you do your Christmas shopping.

But if you are in the Sidney area, the Town Square on Beacon Avenue has a settup that's unique in this area and counters the three general premises above.

It's the P.A.L.S. (Playing and Learning Safely) Child Centre, run by Leanne and Gordon Jones.

From Monday to Saturday, 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., the couple, who have three children of their own, look after children from two to seven years of age on an hourly basis.

Each child may stay a maximum of three hours per day.

The hourly drop-in rate is $1.50. For those wanting the service on a long-term basis, two-hour sessions twice a week cost $22 for the month.

The two-hour sessions are from either 9:30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. or from 1 to 3 p.m. There is a 10 per cent discount for a second child.

The Jones' opened their centre in October and already the news has spread. Apart from Sidney residents, they have children who are brought in from Brentwood, "a couple of regulars from Mayne Island" and others from Hornby Island.

When The Times visited the centre about 10 tots were in the large, bright room that overlooks the main street. Some were flexing muscles on a climbing apparatus. Some played with toys. Others were painting or drawing in the art area. Young Jeffrey Ilott sat at a tot-sized table, eating his lunch, oblivious to the interview.

The children were intrigued by the photographer with the exception of four-year-old Adam Street who said he didn't like cameras.

The play centre also has a reading area where Gordon and Leanne Jones read stories or put on video presentations.

The centre is licensed by the Capital Regional District's health department for up to 16 youngsters at one time.

While it is the first vecture of this kind for the Jones, neither are strangers to the world of child care. They are both licensed pre-school supervisors and operated their own private nursery school for eight years in Port Alberni. (Gordon was the only male in a class of 20 when he took his training.)

Leanne is also an elementary school teacher and the writer of two children's books.

She first considered running a child drop-in centre when going through the exercises all mothers do when they shop with tots who tire of the commercial rounds. "It's not only hard on the mothers, it's hard on the children too," she says.

Her husband says the centre is also proving popular with parents who want to have a quiet lunch together or women who must keep such things as doctor's appointments.

The couple decided to get into the business after visiting a similar centre in San Diego. Child-minding centres are becoming a minor boom in the U.S. Palo Alto Pre-Schools, for example, operates one in the newly-opened University Towne Shopping Centre at La Jolla, Calif.

Palo Alto Pre-Schools operate 22 child care centres, most of them like the traditional nursery.

Depending on the demand, the Jones are considering expanding the hours of their Sidney clinic in future. If there are enough parents who want to leave their children somewhere safe when they go out at night the centre may also remain open in the evenings.

Town Square is Sidney's newest shopping centre and Mrs. Jones says she and her husband are fortunate to have forward-thinking landlords. "We really think it's terrific for Art and Alice Kool (the owners of the building) to let us be here."

Play is work and toys are 'tools'

By VICTORIA IRWIN
Christian Science Monitor

Play is work for children. And the tools of the trade are toys.

Parents, relatives and friends searching for some "tools" to put under the Christmas tree this year have a wide variety of choices, with more than 150,000 kinds of toys on the market.

"Use your knowledge about the individual child," says Jennifer Birckmeyer of the College of Human Ecology at Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y. "A 5-year-old interested in tasting toys shouldn't receive one with small parts, even if it is within his age range."

Margaret Truman Daniel, a spokeswoman for the toy industry, has some advice for parents for after Christmas.

"Children must be taught to care for their own toys. I told my boys that if they didn't take care of a toy or left it around where someone might trip on it, I would take it away. And I did once or twice. They got the message," she says.

Toys should be a learning tool for children, helping them to develop their own imagination and creativity. Buy toys that suit the age and ability of the child, these mothers advise. Read labels for age and safety recommendations. "Parents should know their child's capabilities mentally, physically, and emotionally," says Mrs. Daniel, mother of four boys.

Be wary of toys with sharp edges and points and loose parts and those put together with straight pins, wires, staples or nails, they advise. Be careful of playthings made from glass or brittle plastic.

Check the fabric of a toy to see if it is flammable. Avoid toys that will be difficult to keep clean. And watch for playthings that make loud noises.

Stay away from shooting games or games with projectiles. Electrical toys are not advised for young children.

Give children an easy-to-reach and attractive storge space for toys, and teach them to put toys away when finished. She does not recommend toy boxes or chests, which can be dangerous when the lid falls down. "Besides, toys kept in a box are often put in a mess," she says.

Mrs. Daniel advises that parents keep certain toys out of reach of younger children. Older brothers and sisters should be taught to keep toys away from young siblings.

Remember that there is no substitute for being with a child when he or she is playing. Supervision is as important as any safety measures. Many injuries from toys are caused by misuse.

Mrs. Birckmeyer also tells parents to watch out for stereotypes in children's playthings, particularly in toys and books for children under age 3. She says that people are not as aware of stereotypes in this age range, citing a book for 2-year-olds about growing up that shows the female as a secretary and the male as an astronaut.

Mrs. Birckmeyer notes that many children want toys that traditionally belong to the opposite sex, such as a doll for a boy or a truck for a girl.

"They should have both," she says. "It's good for younger children to have unstructured toys, such as plain wooden blocks, without letters or pictures."

Other suggestions for gifts that Mrs. Birckmeyer lists are dolls that can be washed, small cars and housekeeping toys for both boys and girls.

"They need to play out the scenes of everday life," Mrs. Birckmeyer says.

Skepticism can't cure varicose veins

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

I have had varicose veins for a long time. The surgeon who examined me wants to operate on me. I want to avoid this. Are there any exercises that can help me? I know that surgeons like to cut. Is there any other good treatment for varicose veins?

Mrs. G.E.G.

Dear Mrs. G.:

Before I get involved in a discussion of varicose veins and the different ways of treating them, I would like to direct myself to the fundamental and unfair misconception that you harbor. To say that surgeons "like to cut" is a kind of skepticism that is a greater reflection on you than it is on the surgeon.

The doctor-patient relationship is one of the greatly-valued associations in our modern social structure. This relationship thrives on mutual trust and devotion. When that trust does not exist, as it obviously does not in your mind, one is being deprived of a very precious gift.

The accusation that surgeons "like to cut" is a very naive one. Do you really believe that any respected surgeon in your community would violate his own morality in order to operate on your varicose veins? Do you really believe that another surgical case is so important to that surgeon that his destiny will be affected by your operation? Think about it. You will probably reconsider your foolish accusation.

That surgeons "like to cut" is not an unfamiliar flippant expression. It does a cruel injustice to the many surgeons who have saved innumerable lives and restored the health of countless thousands with their remarkable surgical techniques and scientific judgment.

Now, about varicose veins. When once they have become evident in the legs, it means that changes have already occurred in the muscle walls of the veins. Weaknesses of the valves within the veins (there are small valves in veins) are rarely, if ever, reversible. The exercises that you seek for varicose veins do not exist. If someone persuades you that they do exist, it will further delay your confrontation with the truth about your condition.

There are now many excellent methods used to discover if the superficial or the deep veins of the legs are affected. Each case must be individually studied, to determine the efficiency of the flow of blood in the veins. When once the nature and the extent of the varicosities are determined, the surgeon can choose the ideal technique for solving your particular problem.

If your confusion and skepticism still stand in the way of your making a decision, there is always your right to request a second, or even a third, opinion.

Villainous Marco a survivor

By JOHN GOUDAS

Soap opera villains, more often than not, are short-term characters. However, some of these villains, in particular Marco Dane (played by Gerald Anthony) on One Life to Live, have managed to survive and enthrall viewers by combining a mysterious foreboding demeanor with a hint of vulnerability.

The nefarious Marco Dane, for example, had dealings with the underworld, ran a prostitution ring and engaged in blackmail. His acts prompted a death list of enemies so extensive that he was marked for death. Viewers, however, know that the killer mistook Marco's brother Mario for Marco and shot Mario dead.

In desperation, Marco seized the opportunity to take on his brother's identity.

Gerry Anthony found it a challenge playing Marco in the act of pretending to be Mario. This seemingly new character was cleanshaven, parted his hair differently, and effected a new gait, tone of voice and mannerisms all his own. However, according to Gerry, "they were not extensive changes. You see, Marco would not have been skillful enough to portray Mario that much better."

The appeal of Gerald Anthony's characterization parallels his own adventurous life. "I'm very much of a wanderer," said Anthony. "I just wanted to keep moving all the time."

And moving is just what he did. In a 10-year period before coming to New York, Gerry "got into different things; directing in Seattle, acting in Philadelphia, but I knew that there was something more."

When he first ventured into the world of soaps, the role as Marco was just another job in his career, but that attitude changed quickly and now Gerry's proud of the work he has done on One Life to Live.

Channel Chatter: Jerry Lacy, the handsome soap actor who looks like a young Humphrey Bogart, has joined the cast of The Young and the Restless. Young and the Restless," as Jonas, a cafe owner. Leslie Brooks Prentiss has been seeking refuge in his cafe. Fans will probably remember Lacy from his five-year run as Rick Latimer on Love of Life. His fans should also be alerted to his guest appearance on White Shadow on Jan. 1...

Maricia McCabe (Sunny McClure on Search for Tomorrow) recalls her modeling days. However, Marcia wasn't seen in those high-fashion layouts generally seen in magazines. She usually had to use her personality, like the time she posed as a distraught secretary for an ad...

Kathleen Kellaigh (Lainie Marler of Guiding Light) is spending the holidays with her family in Atlanta, Ga. When she returns to New York, she begins rehearsals for George Bernard Shaw's Arms and the Man, which opens off-Broadway in January...

Plot Portents: Don wants to clean up the porno problem in Salem on Days of Our Lives, but daughter Donna is about to be in the thick of it with nude photos. Stephanie needs help with her pill problem, perhaps it will come from Chris.

Jill may have Derek on The Young and the Restless, but Kay intends to get her money's worth out of the man. Casey Reed is falling for Luke and Nikki admits to Greg she's not ready to settle down.

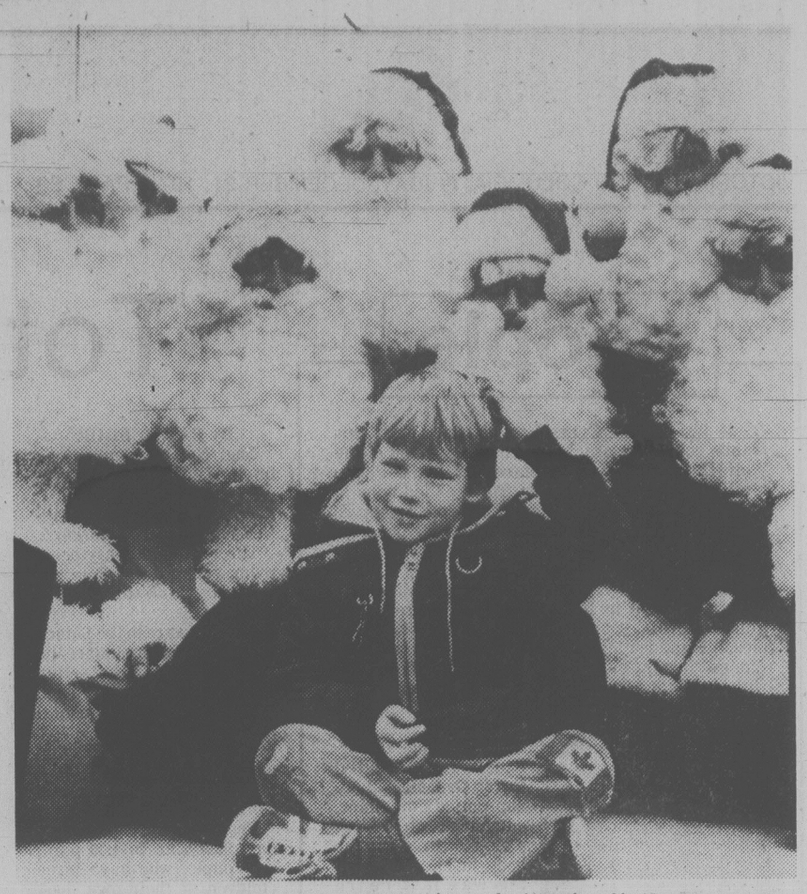

Jackie thinks about separating Justin and Elizabeth on Guiding Light. Renee is frightened by Roger's attitude and Diane is terribly hurt when she learns of Hope and Alan's plans.

Paul continues to deal with his feelings for Ann on All My Children, while Sybil is again making things difficult for Cliff.

Herb is concerned about Gretel's growing interest in Will on One Life to Live. Meanwhile, it seems that Ed and Karen are becoming more than just good friends.

The economic loss suffered by consumers when their automobiles rust prematurely and the resulting consumer dissatisfaction prompted Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada and the provincial governments to take action.

To achieve minimum levels of rust resistance in vehicles purchaser in Canada, a Federal/Provincial Task Force on Automobile Corrision developed an Anti-Corrosion Code in co-operation with automobile manufacturers and importers. The Code has also been ratified by the Canadian Federation of Municipalities, the Consumers' Association of Canada and the Canadian Automobile Association. The Code became effective with the 1978 model year. Although it will not help anyone who has already suffered the consequences of premature rusting, the introduction of this Code should certainly help in the future.

A demolition derby served up as humor

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

The Rock group The Who became famous for destroying their instruments on stage in the name of music.

In the movie 1941, now playing in Victoria, producer-director Steven Spielberg (Jaws, Close Encounters of the Third Kind) has taken the fine art of total chaos even further. Spielberg may be the first producer to stage a two hour demolition derby in the name of humor.

1941 is a mythical account of a Japanese submarine attack on Hollywood shortly after Pearl Harbor, while the California coast is reeling from shock and on the edge of hysteria. The action takes place during a 24 hour period Dec. 13 when Los Angeles area residents practically destroy their own city in a froth of frenzied paranoia. Japs are sighted flying over city, a secret enemy airstrip is rumored to be located in the cornfields of Palo Alto and citizens are arming themselves and preparing for an invasion.

Worst of all, John Belushi is on the lose as Wild Bill Kelso. As gross as he was in Animal House, Belushi almost manages to outslobber himself in 1941. Belching, drooling, shrieking and chewing on a blackened cigar stump, he flies over southern California looking for slants. "I've been trailing them all the way from Fresno," he tells one befuddled gasoline attendant."

The movie is a mad satire of war, all military establishments and civilization in general. Everybody looks stupid in this movie, from the generals in command down to the goofy homeowners trying to protect their property from the yellow peril lurking offshore.

An incredibly large cast and crew and intricately-staged nonstop cartoon violence fill the screen from beginning to end. Everybody takes incredible pratfalls, but miraculously, nobody gets hurt. Not even Wild Bill who crawls onto the enemy submarine in a John Wayne parody near the end of the film and demands to be taken to Tokoyo.

A dance hall jitterbug sequence and a scene in an amusement park with the Japanese sub shooting at the ferris wheel as if it was some kind of strategic target are hilarious. But even so, two hours of sustained slapstick humor can become tedious and the movie tends to drag in spots.

The all-star cast includes Robert Stack as U.S. General Stilwell fond of Walt Disney movies who happens to be in charge of defending the West Coast and Toshiro Mifune as Japanese Imperial Commander Mitamura. Dan Aykroyd is tank commander Sergeant Tree, Ned Beatty and Lorraine Gary are a couple of Santa Monica residents whose home is used as a defence position with disastrous results and Tim Matheson as a sex-crazed aide to Stilwell.

audrey johnson

There are people in Victoria who will tell you that they have not visited the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria for months. Or perhaps never. They keep meaning to go "one of these days ..." but somehow the convenient day eludes them.

For all such people there could be no more appropriate timing than the present. We rush through the Christmas season, doing all the expected routine things, seldom taking time to steer out of the mainstream for a different kind of spiritual refreshment.

Currently the Victoria Gallery on Moss Street has rooms full of wonders that relate to the true Christmas; to children; to the past in nostalgic recognition of the charm of old things and the marvels of fine craftsmanship.

Take a little time and a long look; take the family. There are pleasures and discoveries for everyone.

If you have little ones with you, start with the Children's Show. This room has been allotted to a series of paintings, drawings and sculptures on the subject of creatures; and everything has been hung or set low enough to come within comfortable range of a young child's view.

Most children have a natural instinct for art and they will probably be as charmed with Picasso's simple, lyrical Dove of Peace as will accompanying grown-ups. Expressing the humorous perception of the young mind, there is Alfred Pellan's Dix Chats, a pen and ink drawing that captures feline character irresistably; and Molly Bobak's wonderful spiney porcupine done in charcoal.

Also among all these delightfully perceived creatures there is a gorgeous fun rooster by Maxwell Bates that seems the epitomy of Ogden Nash's Carnival of Animals description — "The rooster is a roistering hoodlum/His battle cry is cock-a-doodlum ... "

Sculpture includes an appealing ceramic calf and a cuddly looking fat woodchuck. But probably the sculptural highlight for the kiddies will be D. Gilhooley's irreverently humorous and colorful busts of Frog Victoria and Frog Albert.

It's tempting to linger with the animals, to go back and look again at Ann Kipling's fragile yet warty iguana, and the plumply playful Mexican Colima pottery dog.

But you drift out of that gallery into the next and are immediately surrounded by Christmas in its most reverent and mystical ambience.

The Adoration of the Magi and the Holy Family are repeated around the room, spelling out the endless fascination, and the imagination artists have called upon through hundreds of years, to express the Christ birth.

From a tiny delicate ivory carving of the Adoration, several Durer woodcuts and many etchings, to an 18th century terracotta Virgin and Child. From ancient icons elaborately worked in tempera with silvered and gilt tin, to ritualistically detailedoils on canvas, some dating from the late renaissance.

Of the oils, the most compelling — in fact the single work which held me in awed and enthralled contemplation — is a remarkable study that focuses on Joseph and the Christ Child. It is a fairly large painting by a major 18th century Austrian painter, Paul Troger.

The color is rich, shimmering with life; light values, juxtaposition of highlight and shadow — the chiaroscura — are splendidly manipulated. The Virgin and John the Baptist are there but only as a frame and balance for the central emphasis of Joseph closely but reverently enfolding the Child. In fact one might be led to imagine that a different artist had painted the flanking figures, so void are they of the detail that characterizes the principal subjects.

The heads of man and child are close together, the furrowed face of Joseph filled with awed tenderness and care; the infant's resting against his cheek — peaceful, half asleep, confident, bathed in a soft radiance.

The painting is a work of devotion and high craftsmanship that, apart from its religious content, captures completely the relationship between vulnerable infancy and caring age.

For those who are traditionalists, and that means the majority of art seekers, a main gallery filled with an extensive exhibition of paintings by Legh M. Kilpin, provides much pleasure.

Kilpin was an English artist who worked in Canada for a number of years. Technically extremely versatile and competent his style ranges widely. A skilled portraitist and an equally able landscape artist, from a critical viewpoint some of his work is flawed by being over-sentimental, almost verging at moments on calendar art.

Echoes of the Pre-Raphaelites - an English school of the mid 19th century that included William Morris and Sir John Millais — are to be found among the portraits but there is one especially lovely oil study of Mrs. Kilpin and many delightful small landscapes that are gems.

Of the Canadian scenes there is a remarkable feeling for the quality of snow. A favorite of mine has come a long way from the Pre-Raphaelites; Early Snowfall is quite impressionist in feeling; freer and far less explicit than most of the other work on view.

Decorative arts and selections from the Asian collection fill two more galleries. Interesting, often lovely and rare creations in clay, silk, lace, silver, tapestry, porcelain, lacquer, tempt one to linger well beyond one's allotted hour or so.

I feel unable to comment on the current Vancouver Island Invitational sculpture exhibition. If you think of sculpture in terms of stone and bronze representing a recognizable form, be prepared to find not only wood and metal, but plastic material used here.

Some of the forms are huge, angular, seemingly related to the world of heavy industry and garantuan labor.

We are told that they bear a strong relationship to the space in which they exist, both inside and outside the gallery. And of course it is true that sculpture can never be divorced from the space it inhabits.

Still, it will take me a little time to absorb and come to an agreeable relationship with these concepts. Eliza Mayhew's five small pieces are more lyrical and empathetic for me — perhaps the artist will object to this view. Nevertheless I could live with them; but not, to be honest, with the other works. Perhaps one day; when and if my contemporary perception improves.

Traditional toy gaining ground

WINNIPEG (CP) — Sales of high-technology games my be booming, but wooden toys and the traditional stuffed doll are gaining ground with Christmas gift buyers, a number of toy shop operators say.

Most store managers said electronic games are popular among children from 10 years of age to young teenagers.

"This is the first year there's been such a wide selection," said Shirley Kilpatrick, a toy buyer for Eaton's.

But despite the array of sophisticated electronic marvels to choose from, store spokesmen said many shoppers are choosing toys that recall those their grandparents owned.

Jeff Boult, central region toy manager for the Hudson's Bay Co., said the trend is toward a basic, simple toy, particularly in dolls.

"I'm finding more of the parents are getting more value-conscious. I think mothers are looking at the actual play value of a doll.

"It doesn't take any imagination on the part of a child to assimilate that a doll wets, or dances or spins in a circle."

Irene Pidstawka, manager of the Hans Christian toy store, says: "People are going back to the things which are just regular."

People have been calling the store and asking for wooden trains that run on wooden rails and don't need batteries, she said.

"Batteries cost extra and the cost of the batteries in the next year can be almost as much as the toy itself," Mrs. Pidstawka said.

One toy specialist said that for the first time in her 14 years in the business she has seen people reading packages to avoid battery-operated toys.

Most toy store representatives who said they noticed the trend cited the tight-money situation.

Synthesized sun tans are not free of hazards

joan watson
for consumers

Now that a dull, wet winter is upon us, many of us can't wait for a winter vacation and more of the summer sun. In fact, so many of us are sun-seekers that Canadians are among the world's top winter vacationers. And a February tan, long thought to be a sign of wealth, health and the good life, is one of our proudest signs of that winter vacation.

But what if you lack the time or the money to go south for awhile, but still want that tan? Some Canadians have relied on ordinary home sunlamps. But now we're told there is another way — the tanning booth. For about two dollars per exposure, on a monthly or quarterly contract, you can buy yourself about ten doses a month of ultra-violet radiation.

"It's probably safer than sunlamps at home," says Dr. Howard Donsky, head of dermatology at Toronto General Hospital. "At least there's some reasonable supervision, and less chance of people falling asleep under the sunlamp, the way they do at home."

But these devices aren't without risk. Whether it comes from the sun or a sunlamp, "Ultra-violet isn't safe," according to Dr. Emanuel Somers, Director-General of the Environmental Health Division, Health Protection Branch. "The short-wave ultra-violet causes tanning. That's why people like to sit in the sun between 10 and 2, and that's why there's such a big increase in the incidence of skin cancer."

Prolonged exposure to ultra-violet radiation causes skin cancer and premature aging of the skin. Some manufacturere claim that their booths use ultra-violet A radiation which is less likely to cause burns. But Dr. Donsky warns "That has other risks over the long haul. In addition to skin cancer, there is a theoretical risk of cataracts."

The intensity of the ultra-violet in the radiation booths is much stronger than that found in sunlight, and the manufacturers rightly claim that a few minutes in the booth is equivalent to several hours in the sun. This is why the risk of sunburn is so great, though no accidents have been reported yet to Health Protection Branch.

Because most users strip to enter the booth, and all parts of their bodies are exposed to the ultr-violet rays, serious burns might occur on those parts of the body that have never been exposed to sunlight before, such as the armpits, the undersides of the breasts and the groin. The eyes are particularly sensitive, and users should wear protective goggles.

Some foods and drugs we take make us more sensitive to sunlight and the burning effects of ultra-violet radiation. Carrot juice, celery juice and lime juice (though not lemon) would do this, as would a whole list of drugs. Dr. Donsky says this list includes some derivatives of tetracycline, and other antibiotics, diuretics and some tranquilizers.

He also warns that even some things we put on the skin could make us photo-sensitive. Any perfume of cologne containing oil of bergamot would do it. But you don't often know whether this oil is in your perfume, because cosmetic manufacturers are not required to list the ingredients on their products.

If you're taking any medication, check with your doctor before signing up for a course of irradiation in a tanning booth.

Health Protection Branch estimates athat about 2,000 people a year get burned by sunlamps. As a result, they are preparing a set of regulations under the Radiation Emitting Devices Act which will cover (if adopted) the design, construction and functioning of sunlamps.

According to Dr. Somer, "The proposed regulations would reduce the possibility of sunlamp-related incidents. There are recommendations to reduce the shorter wave-length UV emissions, the ones that are most dangerous. And they call for warnings and user-safety instructions as well as special lamp bases, protective eye goggles and timers."

Health Protection Branch is also preparing an information sheet to warn the consumer about the health risks associated with sunlamps. It will be available shortly.

If you must use a sunlamp or tanning booth, Dr. Donsky warns: "Let common sense prevail.

"Number one: Don't do it. I really can't understand people going out and paying money for this, but that's up to them.

"Number two: If you do it, surely to goodness, wear eye shields and start at as low a dosage as possible and build up."

If the thought of a sunlamp doesn't turn you on, you might have considered a tan in pill form. Orobronze is a capsule containing a dye similar to the one found naturally in carrots. If you take enough capsules, you will dye the fatty layer below the skin.

Doctor Alex Morrison, Deputy Minister of Health Protection Branch calls it "a tan from the inside out." Because its coloring effect is simply the result of a dye being deposited below the skin it offers no protection against the sun. You still need a lotion or cream to protect you from the sun's ultra-violet rays — unlike a real suntan.

This seems to be the biggest danger with Orobronze — that users might think they were tanned and go into strong sunlight without adequate protection. Dr. Morrison has asked the manufacturer to make this very clear to users.

Taken in the dosage recommended by the manufacturer, Orobronze isn't harmful. "The manufacturer recommends a dosage schedule which we believe to be safe," says Dr. Morrison. "Now, the product is expensive as well, and you're certainly going to pay for that colour."

The amount you take depends on your body weight, and at $26 or more for 80 capsules, it adds up. An average person takes about two weeks to develop the colouring in his body, and then a daily maintenance dose is required.

The color you turn depends on your skin color, and some users have wound up yellow or orange instead of bronze.

Orobronze and tanning booths are both pretty expensive ways to get that tanned look in winter. You might almost save your money and take that trip!

Tots need watching

By SUSAN OKIE
The Washington Post

Please don't eat the poinsettias. Or the holly. And especially not the mistletoe.

The most popular plants families use to deck their halls at Christmas time are poisonous. And doctors say the holiday season is paticularly dangerous for plant-loving children.

Plant eating is the most common cause of calls to poison control centres around the continent.

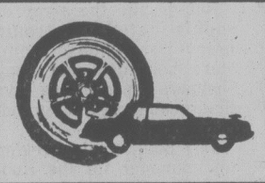

Dr. Lewis Goldfrank, director of emergency services at New York's Bellevue Hospital and an expert on poison plants, said mistletoe is safe if it stays on the ceiling but can be lethal if its berries drop within a toddler's reach.

The leave are harmless, but the berries can cause severe stomach pain, vomiting, diarrhea and — in large quantities — seizures, high blood pressure and fatal cardiac arrest.

Eating holly also can cause stomach pain, vomiting and diarrhea, Goldfrank said they probably are less dangerous than past reports have suggested. The leaves and petals can cause vomiting, and the sap may irritate the skin and eyes, but Dr. Mark Fow said most poison control workers no longer conider poinsettias deadly.

Fow, a toxicologist at the National Clearinghouse for Poison Control Centers, said a review of 2,000 reports of children eating poinsettia plants between 1971 and 1978 showed only 150 of them developed any symptoms. The most serious problem reported was stomach irritation, Fow said.

Dear Mike: Small metal particles are showing up in the pan of my automatic transmission. The car is a 1964 Rambler 660 which, at 120,000 miles, is still going strong. The mechanic suggests that I buy a new or rebuilt transmission. Is there a less expensive alternative? — Hanging In.

Dear Hanging: Some metal filings in the pan of an automatic transmission are normal. You'll rarely find no filings. Expert transmission repairmen can "read" these filings to predict future problems. If you trust your mechanic, and if he says you'll eventually need a new or rebuilt trans, you undoubtedly will. But don't be in a hurry. As long as your transmission is behaving, keept it. A 1964 model with 120,000 miles is entering that stage of life when other maladies begin to surface. A car's transmission, engine, suspension, rear axle, and brakes often go out together at between 100,000 and 150,000 miles. I'm not saying you can't or shouldn't repair these items, but by the time your tranny gives out, you might be ready to consider another car altogether.

Dear Mike: My 1979 Olds 88 cuts out after driving short distances. It acts out of gas. The dealer removed the tank, blew out the fuel lines, and checked my electronic ignition. I've had the car quit four times and need help as soon as possible. — Grounded.

Dear Grounded: The things you didn't mention being checked include the carburetor, fuel pump, fuel filter, and smog system. You might also be getting a vapor lock if a fuel line passes too near the exhaust system. It's impossible for me to diagnose your problem specifically, but I suggest you check out all the above.

Feel free to send your automotive questions to Wheels care of Michael Lamm, Box 7607-B, Stockton, Calif. 95207. Problems of greater reader interest will appear in future columns.

Dear Mike: The starter in my 1973 Ford van sometimes whirs without turning the engine over. I flip the key a couple of times and the starter finally catches. The engine then starts fine. My question is, is this something I can fix myself? I'm on a very tight budget and find it costs me at least $100 every time I take this van into the shop. — Crossed Fingers.

Dear Crossed: Yours is a common problem and not hard to repair. It's most likely a dirty Bendix. Disconnect your battery and remove the starter. Check to see if the spring on the shaft is broken. If it is, replace it. Make sure the exposed gear slides back and forth easily. Then replace the starter. You'll most likely have solved your problem.

Kids air their video beefs

By PENNY GIRARD
Los Angeles Times

Children across the continent are writing not only to Santa these days, but also to the U.S. Federal Communications Commission. The subject, one they appear to know well, is television.

"I am truly disgusted with programs on commercial television," wrote Anne Hascall, 11, a sixth-grade student from Canoga Park, Calif.

In a letter from Winston-Salem, N.C., Uzra Zeya said, "I'm 11 years old and I think TV for kids today is just about the pits. The national networks have to shape up."

At last count about 1,000 pupils had passed on their opinions to the FCC, now embroiled in a heated dispute over the direction of children's television programming.

The FCC commissioners are expected to vote next week to go ahead with a rule-making proceeding that would decide how the agency goes about setting new standards for children's TV.

The FCC's present interest stems from guidelines that the agency published in 1974, based on its belief that broadcasters had an obligation to provide better programs for children, and to curb unfair advertising techniques.

Last October, the commission's staff issued a five-volume report that essentially held that broadcasters hadn't met these obligations.

The broadcast industry has staunchly opposed the commission's intervention in its work, and the issue has been the focus of a major industry lobbying effort. Some Capitol Hill lawmakers have recently suggested that the FCC not proceed too hastily in this area.

On the adult level, the dispute is a complex maze of issues, often discussed in legal jargon.

But through their smaller windows on the world, the young viewers have their own opinions about TV today.

Across the nation, many of their complaints, which may reflect an abundance of unsupervised time as both parents work, have to do with their time after school.

Dick Ward, a fifth-grader from Mankato, Minn., wrote: "I would like shows like after school special and different shows that have some meaning. I watch TV from 3 o'clock to 4:30 p.m. and from 5:30 to 9 o'clock every day unless I have something else going on."

Said another student from the Midwest: "I think there should be more children's shows on TV. Saturday morning is all we have and grownup shows are on all week. It just isn't fair. Children are people too."

Some suggested news shows for the young, especially in the early morning hours before schools open. And Suzette Smith, a high school senior in Honolulu, recommended a nationwide survey of children as the basis for a new educational TV show.

Wherever they live, there seems to be a consensus among the young about a few things they see on television; they dislike game shows, soap operas, commercials and reruns.

"I am a person who watches television a lot," said Denise Kuperman of Chatsworth, Calif. "But there are too many commercials. And one more thing, the amount of reruns these days is ridiculous. I've practically seen all of them. I'm a 10 1-2-year-old girl in the fifth grade and I'm not complaing about much."

Several of the young letter writers complained about violence.

"TV is too violent now," said Michael Craig of Palisades Park, N.J. "You should make TV calmer. You should remember that children get too excited by violent shows."

Others complained about the lack of realism.

"Most of the shows we watch are phony," said Kelly White, of Parlin, N.J. "You should show things that really happen in people's lives. For instance, take the show 'Charlie's Angels.' They never get caught. It makes you think that you could be a beautiful detective and never get killed on a case."

But not everyone wants change.

"I don't believe in showing more educational shows," wrote Elizabeth Breen of Laurence Harbor, N.J. "If a kid has to go to school 6 hours a day, 5 days a week, then he really doesn't want to see the same boring stuff. I believe that school is for working and home is for fun and entertainment, which includes television."

Disco safety next

BY MARLENE ORTON

OTTAWA (CP) — Warning: Discos and rock shows may be dangerous to your health.

That's if the laser lights used to give dancers and singers a flashy effect are neither operated properly nor have necessary safety features, says the health department.

The department has issued safety guides warning manufacturers, distributors and operators of laser devices about the dangers.

"Direct viewing of an unscanned laser beam could permanently destroy one's vision," the department says.

Dr. E. G. Letourneau, head of the radiation protection bureau, said Wednesday federal health officials cannot draw up regulations governing the safe use of the lights. This is a provincial matter.

The guides, in an information letter sent out last week, were drawn up because of the increasing popularity of laser devices outside science and medicine.

"The magnitude of the potential hazard may be seen from the fact that the total attendance at the laser light shows conducted by one company alone approached seven million by the end of 1978," the letter said.

The department had no figures on injuries from lasers.

It warns that lasers used for entertainment have power levels much greater than accepted safe levels for momentary viewing.

"Some lasers are so powerful that they can instantly ignite paper on contact with beam."

Viewing laser light can cause retinal injury which may not even be noticed at first.

During the light show, a projector uses one or more high-powered lasers to project patterns onto a screen or through the air. The effect is achieved with optical devices which scan the laser beam.

"A hazardous situation can arise from the beam being reflected or redirected into the audience from reflective surfaces in the auditorium, the failure of the scanner to scan with sufficient speed, or members of the audience gaining access to the beam location in some way."

Also, a person connected with the light show should be designated as responsible for the immediate termination of the laser emissions and have access to the emergency controls.

Under the proper conditions, high-powered lasers can be used safely, the department said.

Otherwise, a tragedy could easily occur.

Security tight in Bethlehem

BETHLEHEM, Israeli-Occupied West Bank (UPI) — Record crowds and extremely tight Israeli security are expected for Christmas celebrations in the town where tradition says Jesus Christ was born, but it's the pinch of inflation that is worrying the natives.

Thousands of troops and police will patrol the Arab West Bank town of Bethlehem throughout the holiday period in a tighter than ever security network because of the recent Grand Mosque siege by Moslem fanatics in Mecca, Saudi Arabia.

"This shows that an attack on a holy site is no longer taboo," said a source at the West Bank military government. "If terrorists can hit Mecca, they could be expected to hit anywhere."

It is the 13th Christmas season the Israelis are overseeing since the 1967 Middle East War when they captured the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

West Bank military government sources said the thousands of army troops and crack border guards deployed during the festivities will be cautioned to show greater vigilance for possible attempts to mar the festivities.

But Mayor Elias Freij, in an interview in his office overlooking Manger Square, said he does not believe Palestinian guerrillas will disrupt the Christmas celebrations.

He said the people of Bethlehem are not worried about security, but about inflation — running at about 100 percent annually in Israel.

"With inflation running so high people can hardly afford to make ends meet," the mayor said. "They can hardly buy Christmas presents for their children."

"The whole month of December has been slow this year," said Diane Marcos, manager of a souvenir shop on Manger Square who agreed with the mayor.

Inflation or not, the Bethlehem city fathers invested some $15,000 to decorate the city for Christmas. Israel put up one fifth of the amount.

On Christmas Eve, a tight security cordon will ring the 1,653-year-old Church of the Nativity where 14 pointed silver stars and 16 silver lamps mark the spot where Jesus was born.

Despite the heavy security, Israeli tourist officials expect about 36,000 pilgrims to attend celebrations in the windswept, hilltop city during the three-week Christmas season — 30 percent more than in the previous year.

Midnight mass will be celebrated in the adjacent 98-year-old St. Catherine's Church. Both structures form the eastern boundary of Manger Square, Bethlehem's main thoroughfare.

Last Christmas, only minutes before the start of midnight mass, a small bomb went off on a narrow alleyway in the city, a stone's throw from police lines surrounding the square but no one was hurt.

After 124 ballots, UN council seat undecided

UNITED NATIONS (CP) — After 124 fruitless ballots, the United Nations General Assembly has temporarily given up its attempt to select a new Latin American member for the security council, but plans to get back to work immediately after Christmas.

The assembly was due to have ended its 34th regular session this week but the impasse over the Security Council election means the delegates will be back in their seats Dec. 27 after a six-day Christmas break.

Cuba and Colombia have been vying for the council seat since voting began on Oct. 26. of the 15 council seats, five are held by the permanent members — the U.S., the Soviet Union, Britain, France and China — and 10 are filled for two-year terms by members selected by the assembly.

The problem arose with the seat being vacated by Brazil. It is traditionally filled by a Latin American country and Cuba and Colombia both ran for it. And ran, and ran and ran.

There now have been 124 secret ballots, with neither country able to muster the two-thirds majority necessary for election.

Action on Kung awaits letter from RC bishop

TUEBINGEN, West Germany (AP) — The state government said Thursday it would do nothing about the status of Rev. Hans Kung as a theology professor at Tuebingen University until it hears from the Roman Catholic bishop responsible for acting against him.

"As long as the letter from Bishop (Georg) Moser hasn't arrived, the ministry won't undertake any measures against Prof. Kung," said an official of the Baden-Wuerttemberg science ministry.

On Tuesday, the Vatican stripped the 51-year-old priest of his right to teach Roman Catholic theology for challenging church doctrine. The Vatican decision generated protests by churchmen in Europe, the United States and Canada.

Kung and Bishop Moser met Wednesday to discuss the teaching ban decreed by the Vatican Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith. The talks were "an attempt, despite the difficult situation, to still reach an agreement," a spokesman for the bishop said.

In Italy, official church sources said the Vatican expects German bishops to handle Kung's case. They said the Vatican would only become involved again if Kung continued to teach in defiance of the ban. He might then be stripped of his priestly functions, they said.

Joseph Cardinal Hoeffner, chairman of the German Bishops' Conference, said at a news conference Tuesday that Moser will apply to the state ministry asking for Kung's release.

The Diocese of Rottenburg-Stuttgart appointed Kung to the theology post in 1960 with the approval of the ministry and the university's faculty.

Kung's mandate to teach theology can be withdrawn by the church, but he still remains a civil servant entitled to a professorship in another state university faculty, the ministry says.

IUD manufacturer sued for $140M

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — Twenty-eight women, saying an intra-uterine birth control device lacerated uterine walls and caused infection, have filed $140 million in lawsuits against the manufacturers of the Dalkon Shield, their lawyer says.

The separate lawsuits, filed Tuesday in Orange County Superior Court, contend the IUD, manufactured by the A. H. Robins Co. of Richmond, Va., has five barb-like fins on its sides that scratch the walls of the uterus and that strings attached to the bottom of the small plastic IUDs carry bacteria into the uterus.

The women contend they suffered acute pelvic infections as a result of the devices.

Robins spokesmen could not be reached for comment.

All 28 suits were filed by John Van Dyke, a Fullerton lawyer who sued the same company in October on behalf of nine other women on similar grounds.

In August, a Denver woman won a $6.2-million judgment against Robins after testifying she suffered a miscarrage and underwent an emergency hysterectomy 10 months after being fitted with a Dalkon Shield.

$1.5B aid to Chrysler okayed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States Congress rushed to the aid of Chrysler Corp. today with $1.5 billion in guaranteed loans, the largest federal bailout of a U.S. corporation in history. Now, it's up to the auto-maker, its lenders and its unionized workers to complete a financing plan to stave off bankruptcy.

After a day of haggling over the size of employee wage concessions and other differences in their aid bills, the House of Representatives and Senate approved a four-year $3.5-billion public-and-private financing plan for the foundering company and sent it to President Carter for his expected signature.

The bill, the last measure to be passed this year by Congress, is along the lines of a bill proposed by the Carter administration.

The compromise Chrysler aid package, reached by House and Senate bargainers after six hours of negotiations Thursday, requires Chrysler's 105,000 unionized workers to forgo $462.5 million in wage and fringe-benefit gains during the next three years.

Without the loan guarantees, bankruptcy by the 10th-largest U.S. industrial corporation would be certain by mid-January, company officials say.

But even with the federal assistance, there is no certainty that the company will avert bankruptcy.

"I can't tell you with total confidence that it all will go into place," executive vice-president Gerald Greenwald told a Senate committee on Thursday when asked about the prospects of lining up short-term financing.

UAW officials, meanwhile, were unhappy with the size of the wage concessions, which the union sought to hold at $400 million. The higher figure, demanded by the Senate, "is still nearly impossible to meet," said Howard Young, a top aide to UAW President Douglas Fraser.

In return, company employees would receive $162.5 million in newly issued Chrysler common stock.

In Ottawa, Canada's federal government is moving closer to a favorable decision on financial help for Chrysler Corp.'s Canadian subsidiary in the wake of the U.S. agreement.

The Progressive Conservative government long has maintained it could take no action until it saw what the Carter administration was prepared to do.

Government sources indicated earlier in the day Ottawa is "heavily influenced by the U.S. commitment." They suggest the U.S. developments, coupled with opposition pressure on the Conservatives to make a decision soon — during the Feb. 18 election campaign — may result in an inevitable "yes," despite the financial risks.

A spokesman for Economic Development Minister Robert de Cotret said the minister will not say anything "until after President Carter signs the bill." De Cotret was away from Ottawa Thursday, campaigning for the seat of Berthier-Maskinonge where he is running in the upcoming election.

Federal officials are expected to meet soon with their Washington counterparts to review the final U.S. aid plan.

Volkswagen pays $2M damages in van crash

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Volkswagen must pay nearly $2 million in damages in connection with a VW van crash that left one U.S. marine dead and three others permanently injured in North Carolina.

A six-member jury ruled Wednesday that negligence on the part of Volkwagen of America and its parent company in Germany caused the 1975 accident.

The four marines left the U.S. Marine Corps Air Station in Cherry Point, N.C., and were traveling on a two-lane highway when the axle on a borrowed 1972 Volkswagen Micro-Bus broke.

The van rolled over several times on the highway and the four men were thrown from the vehicle. A fifth passenger who remained in the car was unhurt in the crash.

The jury awarded $1 million to Rinaldo Irizarry, then 19, of New York City, who is a quadriplegic as a result of the accident.

Barry Seese, then 18, of Cochranville, Pa., who suffered permanent brain damage, was awarded $600,000.

The vehicle's driver, Martin Ramos, then 26, was awarded $200,000 for suffering permanent damage to his wrists. A career non-commissioned officer, the staff sergeant is a former paratrooper forced to take a desk job in Quantico, Va., as a result of the accident. The jury cleared him of any negligence as the driver.

The estate of Jose Torres was awarded $150,000. The 22-year-old New York City resident died of a crushed skull, testimony at the trial indicated.

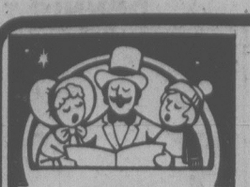

The marines' attorney, Hank Wallace, argued Volkswagen was guilty of gross negligence. He said the men were thrown out of the vehicle when the windows popped out during the crash.

Volkswagen does not use any glue to keep the windows in place and the jury decided the windshield-retention problem constituted negligence on the company's behalf.

The case was heard in New Jersey because Volkswagen's United States headquarters is located in Englewood Cliffs.

CLUES ACROSS

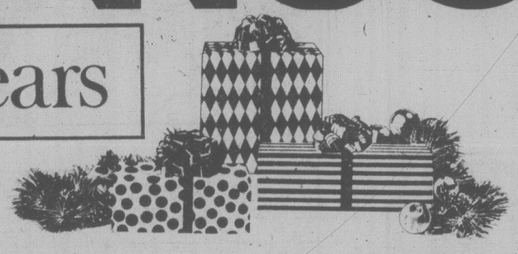

3. SHIP not shop. There is little reason why you should want to "take a look round" a carpenter's shop or the like. A shop in the sense of a retail store would show attractive or desirable goods rather than "interesting things." SHIP is a more convincing answer.
6. FIREMAN not foreman. Fire can spread or act so rapidly that "every moment" may count to a FIREMAN at times. Though a foreman may want things done urgently, "every moment may count" is an exaggeration.
9. TRICE not trick. "In a TRICE," yes; but, rather, as or by a trick.
11. SKIN not skis. The SKIN "should," ideally, be smooth, although it often tends to be rough. Skis are simply made smooth.
13. LAST not fast. Since he is a star, he can be assumed to be fast anyway, so this answer tends to lack point. Running LAST, after his team-mates have lost ground, he is especially in the position to "make up" lost ground.
14. RILE not rule. Whether ruled or not, it is only if he is RILED that he stands to "blow his top."
16. DIG not die. "Lacking foxholes" gives them reason to DIG, expecially. Being soldiers, they may die anyway.
17. POST not past. Even at the gloomiest view, a man will see his past as studded with failures, rather than as one great failure in its entirety — a view he might take of a POST or job.

CLUES DOWN

1. PERCH not peach. The whole essence of a PERCH is that it is more or less raised. Peach is apt only if one takes it to mean a growing peach; however, to most people, it is simply something to eat.
2. CAP not lap. The clue suggests something that will serve as a handy receptacle (which a boy's lap, with a space between his legs, will not do).
6. FATHER not fatter. Aptly, it is a relevant thing to say of a chap that he is "the FATHER of two boys." Fatter is a trivial answer.
7. NAW not nag. Many cowboy actors use "NAW" for "no." "Nag" is more frequent in racetrack slang.
10. LAND not sand. There is no point in specifying "desert" sand (as if other sand is notably fertile). In any case, the sands of the desert constitute LAND of a kind.
12. CLASHES not classes. "Violence" is to be deplored whether the CLASHES in question occur in classes or not.
20. GUTS not guns or guys. Effective combat is a question of GUTS, and of equipment and training, etc., rather than sheer numbers of guns. A numerically superior force is hardly termed "the army with the most guys."
21. ASS not asp. The fatal bite of an asp is a good deal worse than "very nasty."
22. TIP not top. "Extremity" suggests an outermost or lateral TIP, rather than the top. In any case, the "top" can be the major upper portion, not just the extreme top.

Contract Bridge — B. Jay Becker

You are declarer with the West hand at Six Spades and North leads the four of clubs. How would you play the hand?

	♠AKJ1084 ♡J9 ◇A94 ♣A2
♠Q9752 ♡AQ ◇KJ3 ♣K83	N W E S

This is strictly a percentage problem. There is no way of guaranteeing the slam, but there is a way that gives you the best chance for the contract. Three different methods of play stand out. They all start the same way. You win the club with the ace, draw trumps, cash the king of clubs and ruff a club.

Method No. 1. You take a heart finesse. Assume it loses to the king and a heart is returned. You play a diamond to the ace and a diamond back, finessing the jack.

This method of play wins if North has the king of hearts or queen of diamonds. It offers about a 76 per cent probability of success.

Method No. 2. You cash the A-K of diamonds. Let's assume the queen does not fall, in which case you continue with the jack of diamonds.

If South has the queen, school is out because he must return a heart or yield a ruff-discard. But if North has the queen of diamonds, he wins and returns a heart. You finesse and the outcome depends on who has the king of hearts.

This line of play succeeds if either opponent has the singleton or doubleton queen of diamonds, or if South has the queen of diamonds, or if North has the king of hearts. The overall chance is about 78 per cent.

Method No.3. You cash the ace of hearts and exit from dummy with the queen. If South has the king, it's all over because he must lead a diamond or yield a ruff-discard.

If North has the king of hearts, he is forced to return a diamond. If he has the queen or ten, you make the contract. Thus, if North has 10-x-x and plays a low diamond, you follow low from dummy, trapping South's queen. If North plays the ten instead, you cover with dummy's jack to make the contract.

If North has the Q-x-x of diamonds, the outcome is the same. You follow low from dummy on his low diamond lead, take South's ten with the ace and then finesse the jack.

This method of play succeeds if South has the king of hearts, or if North has the ten or queen of diamonds. It yields about an 87 per cent chance of success.

"My two boys?" Tom smiled. "They're both doing well."

"That's fine," Charlie replied. "How old are they now?"

Tom thought a moment. "Well, it makes a little teaser for you. There's just three years between them, and if you total the squares of their ages you get the square of my age."

DINING SUITES
Dine in style over the holidays by giving yourself a present that will last and increase in value as years go by. Rather than just spending money this Christmas invest it in one of our magnificent mahogany and walnut 8-10 piece dining suites from the turn of the century through the 1930's. Superbly crafted in solid wood, no pressed sawdust here. Our truck was in an accident on the way back from New York and Penn. so there is slight freight damage. Rather than having the damage repaired we are selling these suites at much less than we normally would. 10 piece walnut suites from $1595, table, 6 chairs, buffet, china cabinet and server. Open 7 days, most nights, only 15 min. from town, Petes Place, 786 Goldstream, 478-6000. Financing avail. OAC.

CHRISTMAS SPECIALS AT Cornucopia Antiques. Oak plant stands, $55. Bar stools, $35. Vanity and stool, $55. Oak rocker, $95. Maple wash stands, $130. Oak chest of drawer, $150. 8 piece dining room suite, $495. Also mirrors, pictures, china and many curios. 2569 Penrhyn, Cadboro Bay Village, 477-0323

117 ANTIQUES and ARTS

DINING SUITES
Dine in style over the holidays by giving yourself a present that will last and increase in value as years go by. Rather than just spending money this Christmas invest it in one of our magnificent mahogany and walnut 8-10 piece dining suites from the turn of the century through the 1930's. Superbly crafted in solid wood, no pressed sawdust here. Our truck was in an accident on the way back from New York and Penn. so there is slight freight damage. Rather than having the damage repaired we are selling these suites at much less than we normally would. 10 piece walnut suites from $1595, table, 6 chairs, buffet, china cabinet and server. Open 7 days, most nights, only 15 min. from town, Petes Place, 786 Goldstream, 478-6000. Financing avail. @AC.

Kamloops left holding metric grocery bag

KAMLOOPS (CP) — The federal government's decision to delay metric conversion in the food industry has left grocery store owners here wondering whether to switch back to imperial measurements and junk thousands of dollars worth of metric scales and measures.

Grocery stores here have used the metric system since July when they joined Peterborough, Ont., and Sherbrooke, Que., in a government pilot project.

Stores in 21 cities were scheduled to go metric Jan. 1, but small business minister Ron Huntington postponed the conversion indefinitely this week, saying there was too much opposition from consumers.

One store said it had bought $30,000 worth of metric scales and was considering asking the government for compensation.

"At today's interest rates, that's a substantial amount of money," said Gary Cooper, president of Cooper Markets.

"The federal government should be prepared to reimburse businesses which have to switch back," agreed Norm Endean, president of the chamber of commerce.

Mayor Mike Latta said he is particularly concerned about the costs to small businesses who have gone completely metric, rather than keep a dual metric-imperial pricing system.

Georgina Bullen, spokesman for Canada Safeways's 90 outlets in B.C., said the company is faced with storing "a basement full of material" for conversion, including scales, cookbooks and calculators.

She said the company is considering going back to imperial measurements because it cannot afford to operate only three of its stores in metric.

"For one thing it means preparing different ads for Kamloops than for the rest of the province."

She said although some consumers were confused at first by the change, Safeway received no letters of complaints.

She said the company spent more than a year preparing for the conversion, which was to have been implemented throughout Canada by the end of 1981.

Any decision to switch back to the imperial system in the Woodward's Food Floor will be made by the company's head office in Vancouver, said manager Neil MacDonald.

He said metric conversion has gone very smoothly in his store and he cannot understand what all the confusion is about.

Huntington said the government will continue to urge voluntary conversion and he hopes groups such as meat packers, who were on the verge of switching, will proceed as planned.

In defending the postponement, Huntington said Canada is at least seven to nine years ahead of the United States, our main trading partner, in the move toward metrics.

He said Canada was moving into a pure metric system found only in New Zealand, Australia and Singapore. Europe allows products to be labelled in both metric and imperial measurements.

Berry show helped by frost-free days

A great natural outdoor decoration this pre-Christmas week has been the bright berries on many of our evergreen shrubs. Splendid crops have remained untouched by birds during the prevailing mild winter.

If present conditions remain, the berry show will continue. Most birds wait until a hard frost puts an end to other foraging and, at the same time softens berries by freezing the pulp.

Apparently this is much to their liking for we find the berries disappear magically once they have been frosted. So far the birds are scarce in gardens in built-up areas near us and the berries brilliant. Raindrops hanging from the berries catch the slanting light from highway light standards each morning creating an extra period of beauty.

Gardeners who want to attract birds by providing natural food for the birds to gather, plant several kinds of berrying shrubs around the home. Thus two purposes are served — providing food for the bird and pleasure for all who see the berries and the birds.

The presence of the birds also serves two purposes — for the homeowner their returning presence each day while the berries last is a joy, and there is always the hope of their picking up insects, too.

Judging by the actions of resident wrens, there are many forms of insect life lurking in cracks and crevices of tree bark and along wood fences; these are searched by the birds once they are accustomed to visiting the area for the more obvious berry crop.

To grow against a south or southwest facing wall the most commonly seen evergreen berrying shrub is the Firethorn (Pyracantha) with masses of orange-red berries against dark green leaves. Not a climbing plant, it does remain upright or will spread closely against a flat surface once it makes a year's growth.

Its white flowers are attractive in early summer. I notice a few have been encouraged already on plants against Victoria Press walls facing south on Kings Road just off Douglas Street.

A draft of warm air from a nearby exhaust ventilator triggers premature flowering and fruiting on this same plant each year.

In a sheltered sunny garden where north and east winds are excluded, Pyracantha could be trained into a free-standing woody shrub out from the house where it would be more easily viewed from indoors.

Other free-standing berrying shrubs quite easily grown are the Cotoneasters. Some very fine specimens can be seen around Mayfair Shopping parking lot. Several attractive kinds are there, some beautifully arching and spreading with their heavy load of scarlet berries.

I doubt these will be food for birds since the streets adjacent are some of the busiest, but in the home garden, the same shrubs provide many hundreds of bird meals.

If you are visiting a nursery this weekend for Christmas gifts, look for berrying shrubs. They may be just what is needed to add winter color to your own or a friend's garden. And they would be equally at home in large tubs in a balcony garden.

There are recorded sightings of birds visiting and nesting in shrubs on highrise balconies. If there is winter food, why not?

Hostages get Yule visit from clergy

Times News Services

TEHRAN, Iran — Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini said today Catholic and Protestant clergy — especially blacks who have opposed American "crimes" — will be allowed to visit 50 American hostages at Christmas to allow the captives to celebrate Christ's birth "in complete peace."

In an order to the ruling Revolutionary council, Khomeini said:

"On the occasion of the gracious birthday of Jesus, the great prophet, you must invite some of the committed and responsible priests so that the Americans who are in the custody of the Moslem students can attend religious ceremonies in complete peace."

He added, "Naturally, in view of the special position taken by the black clergy — on American crimes — they (black clergy) enjoy priority in this respect."

Khomeini's order confirmed an earlier statement by Foreign Minister Dadegh Ghotbzadeh that clergy would be allowed to visit the captives at Christmas.

Ghotbzadeh also said the captives would be allowed Christmas cards, gifts and Christmas trees. After indicating some of the hostages might even be released before Christmas, Ghotbzadeh later retracted his statement and said probably none of the captives would be freed by then.

Khomeini's order to the Revolutionary council came only hours before the United States was expected to announce plans to go ahead with efforts to seek U.N. economic sanctions against Iran in an effort to secure the quick release of the captives.

A militant spokesman at the embassy said: "Clergymen of all faiths will be allowed to visit the hostages at Christmas. They can include Catholics, Protestants, Armenians and rabbis. Yes, certainly rabbis."

There are several hostages of the Jewish faith.

Meanwhile, new "minimum" demands by Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and militant students dimmed hopes today for an early settlement and diplomatic sources said none of the 50 American hostages are likely be released before mid-January.

The sources said that once hopeful signs the crisis could be resolved quickly were again foundering over Iran's public insistence its "bottom-line" demand was the shah's return to stand trial.

"Our position has not changed from the first," a militant spokesman said. "The hostages for the shah. We start from there."

The students said the hostages — in their 48th day of captivity — would be tried as spies unless this "minimum demand" is met. Khomeini, in his latest interview, supported the militants.

The Carter administration wants the hostages to remain silent if they are put on trial and may not provide them with lawyers, the Washington Star quotes U.S. sources as saying.

There was no immediate comment from the White House on the Star's report or on the call for the hostages' release by Iran's former chief prosecutor, Sadegh Khalkhali, a close associate of Khomeini.

"I regard these people (the hostages) as innocent," said Ayatollah Sadegh Khalkhali, a close confidant of Iranian strongman Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini. "They are our guests. I want them to be released and (to) go back to their homes. Even if they are spies, that is not enough reason to keep them."

Meanwhile, Khomeini was faced with a new challenge to his authoritarian rule by another of Iran's restive minority groups seeking greater autonomy from the central government.

The eruption Thursday by the Baluchis in southeastern Baluchistan province left two persons dead of gunshot wounds and 44 others injured, the official Pars news agency said. The violence flared in Zahedan, the provincial capital, as an envoy, sent by the 79-year-old Moslem patriarch to calm the Baluchis, was speaking in a crowded mosque.

Canadians underestimate American anger over Iran

By JOHN WARD

NEW YORK (CP) — The American frustration and anger over Iran runs much deeper and is more bitter than many Canadians, caught up in their own political problems, seem to realize.

With the distraction of an unusual winter election campaign, Canadians do not appear to recognize the emotions felt by their American neighbors over the seizure of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran by militants.

The holding of 50 American hostages in the embassy has become a focal point for Americans of many differing political stripes.

The Tehran crisis is the pre-eminent news story day after day and is a major topic of conversation everywhere.

One indication of the strong feelings generated by the hostage-taking is found in the glut of mail bound for the embassy in Tehran. Postal authorities report that hundreds of thousands of pieces of mail for Iran are pouring in from across the country, some 80,000 a day from New York City alone.

A major department store here offered free Christmas cards for the hotages and hundreds of people showed up tpay the 31-cent postage and pen a message.

The anger goes beyond mail, though. In a country where the experience of the Vietnam war prompted huge demonstrations, polls now show that a sizeable percentage of the population would support military action if the hotages are harmed by their captors.

One wage, himself an anti-war demonstrator during the Indochina war, commented recently and only half in jest: "The only argument between hawks and doves on Iran is whether to use nukes or conventional bombs."

Iranians living in the U.S. have been threatened and demonstrations by Iranian students in support of ayatollah Khomeini or against the deposed shawh have required heavy police protection in several cities.

The owner of a New Jersey bus line called in six of his drivers who were of Iranian origin and fired them on the spot. American longshoremen have refused to handle cargoes bound for Iran.

President Carter's lacklustre showing in polls earlier this fall have turned around in recent days, mainly due to his quiet, dignified handling of the situation. Even his political opponents have kept mum on the issue while the hostages remain in Iranian hands.

Ordinary people are finding various aays to express themselves in the crisis. Kmerican flags are being displayed all over. Some driver keep their headlights on in the daytime as a show of support for the hostages. Other people are wearing armbadns.

There are literally dozens of lapel buttons that have sprouted since the embassy was seized. They express sentiments ranging from the patriotic to the scatological.

Radio stations around the country are playing many different songs written about the crisis. They, too, range from the patriotic to the militant.

Midway through its second month, the hostage situation has not died away. Public awareness and interest seems to be as high now as they were in the first days after the embassy was taken.

Americans are not only angry at Iran, though. They are also upset about what they see as a lack of support from their allies and complain to foreigners living in the United Sttes that other countries do not seem to want to stand by the U.S.

The fall of the Clark government may have captured that attention of Canadians, but in the U.S., the hig event for the last six weeks and for the immediate future is the Tehran embassy sizure and the plight of the 50 hostages.

Bits of blade in Big Mac?

STOUGHTON, Mass. (UPI) — A 20-year-old man has filed a $1 million suit against McDonald's, claiming he swallowed bits of a razor blade while eating a hamburger from one of the fast-food chain's restaurants.

In a suit filed in Norfolk District Court against the Genian Corp., Totman said he was eating the hamburger purchased at a local McDonald's last Friday when he bit into metal that turned out to be parts of a single-edged razor.

Carter kowtowing to OPEC: Kennedy

CONCORD, N.H. (UPI) — Sen. Edward Kennedy charged today that President Carter has done more to turn over the destiny of the United States to OPEC "than any previous American president."

The latest broadside in a heightening war of words between Kennedy and the administration came in a statement released by his campaign today as he moved through a second day of campaigning in New Hampshire.

Kennedy, the White House and Treasury Secretary G. William Miller exchanged angry charges Thursday stemming from Kennedy's allegation that Miller on his recent trip to Saudi Arabia had done nothing to discourage OPEC ministers from raising oil prices.

The White House demanded that the senator provide proof of his allegations or retract them.

Kennedy told reporters he based his charge on newspaper accounts. Today's statement referred to a Nov. 26 Wall Street Journal report and to other stories in the New York Times and Boston Globe.

The statement charged Miller "invited OPEC to gouge the American public once more with higher prices."

The Massachusetts democrat said Carter, as a candidate in 1976, had promised he would not leave the fate of the country to oil interests.

But as president, "He has done more to turn our destiny over to OPEC than any previous American president," Kennedy charged.

Airline most to blame in DC-10 crash

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. National Transportation Safety Board ruled today that the crash of a DC-10 jetliner in Chicago last May was caused by a 25-centimetre crack in an engine mount and concluded that American Airlines must shoulder the major blame for the worst aviation disaster in North America.

The board cited the airline for maintenance practices which it said caused the crack. But it also said the plane's manufacturer, McDonnell Douglas Corp., and the Federal Aviation Administration must also share some of the blame.

American Airlines Flight 191 crashed on takeoff from Chicago's O'Hare International Airport last May 25 when the left engine ripped away and somersaulted over the wing. The plane stalled, rolled to the left and plunged into an abandoned airfield. All 271 persons aboard the plane and two on the ground were killed.

The board, after two days of discussion, adopted a probable cause that said the separation of the engine resulted from the damage induced by American's maintenance practices.

Listed as contributing causes were McDonnell Douglas' design of the engine mount, or pylon, which the board said made it vulnerable to damage, and deficiencies in the FAA's inspection and reporting systems.

The board's investigative staff had proposed that the crash was the result of the damaged pylon, and that the roles of McDonnell Douglas, American and the FAA all should be listed as contributing causes.

However, the board felt strongly that the airline should share a greater portion of the blame, and added this sentence to the finding of probable cause:

"The separation resulted from damage by improper maintenance procedures which led to the failure of the pylon structure."

Board member Francis McAdams also recommended that the design deficiencies of McDonnell Douglas be part of the probable cause. However, he was voted down by the four other members, who cited the safe operating record of DC-10s that have been maintained according to McDonnell Douglas's recommended procedures.

Following adoption of the probable cause, the board began considering a list of recommendations it would make to the FAA and the airline industry as a result of its investigation.

The investigators said the crash was caused by a 25-centimetre crack in the rear bulkhead of the left wing engine pylon, one of the points where the pylon attaches to the wing.

When the crack gave way, they said, the engine ripped away and somersaulted over the wing, extensively damaging hydraulic fluid lines and electrical cables. Without the cables, cockpit instruments were disabled that might have warned the crew the aircraft was about to stall.

In a stall, a plane's wings do not produce enough lift to support the plane and it literally quits flying.

The DC-10 was about to stall, the investigators said, because the leading edge slats on the left wing, deprived of the hydraulic fluid that forces them to extend, began retracting. The slats extend on takeoff and landing to expand the curve of the wing, allowing it to generate lift at slower speeds than otherwise would be possible.

When the plane stalled, the unbalanced slats caused it to roll over and dive.

The board agreed with a staff recommendation that the crew was in no way to blame and that all members had "performed professionally."

Charles lashes out at IRA

LONDON (CP) — Prince Charles Thursday attacked Irish Republican Army terrorists, calling them cowardly and subhuman extremists.

The heir to the British throne delivered an address at a memorial service in St. Paul's cathedral for his great-uncle, Earl Mountbatten of Burma, who was murdered by the IRA on August 27.

"They succeeded in murdering a man who was desperately trying to sow the seeds of peace for future generations," the 31-year-old prince told the 2,000-strong congregation.

The IRA, fighting British rule in Northern Ireland, had described Lord Mountbatten as a symbol of imperialism.

Prince Charles called it a "cruel and bitter irony that a man who had survived two world wars should have been murdered the way he was."

He said Lord Mountbatten, 79, had been "mercilessly blown to bits through the agency of some of the most cowardly minds imaginable."

"Perhaps the manner of his passing will awaken us to the vulnerability of civilized democracy and freedom to the kind of sub-human extremism that blows people up when it feels like it," Prince Charles said.

Meanwhile, a letter bomb addressed to Employment Minister James Prior was found by a sorter in a post office today in eastern England, police said.

The parcel had a Belgian postmark, like previous explosives mailed to leading businessmen this week.

Khmer remove Pol Pot

BANGKOK, Thailand (UPI) — In a bid to improve their international image and win popular support, Khmer Rouge leaders have overthrown Premier Pol Pot, Western diplomats said today.

And unconfirmed reports circulating in Bangkok said the Pol Pot, 51, premier and Cambodian Communist Party secretary since 1975, had been assassinated after his ouster at a meeting of 67 high-ranking Khmer Rouge officials Dec. 17.

Intelligence reports said the Khmer Rouge leadership, meeting at their secret headquarters in the Cardamom Mountains, had installed the more moderate Khieu Samphan, 48, as premier.

Khieu Samphan, a mild-mannered Marxist economist, also retained his titles as president and chief of state, the reports said.

He has escaped much of the criticism leveled at Pol Pot for the barbarism and massacres during the Khmer Rouge reign.

Thai military sources said they had no confirmation of reports Pol Pot was dead. They said their intelligence indicated he had been left with control of Khmer Rouge military activities while being stripped of his government posts.

Thai sources called the shakeup "a natural effort to find a person who can be accepted by all Khmers."

Diplomats said the Khmer Rouge acted in the face of reports the five-member Association of Southeast Asian Nations wanted to follow Britain's lead and drop its recognition of the Pol Pot regime.

The Khmer Rouge were driven from Phnom Penh last Jan. 7, when some 200,000 Vietnamese troops invaded Cambodia and installed Heng Samrin in the premier's seat.

Pol Pot's Chinese-backed guerrilla government has successfully blocked moves by Heng Samrin to claim Cambodia's seat in the United Nations, but some Southeast Asia nations were reportedly uncomfortable about continuing recognition of a regime responsible for the direct or indirect deaths of an estimated 1 million people.

Diplomats said the move also was taken to persuade the half dozen anti-Vietnamese resistance groups currently operating inside Cambodia to reconsider their vow never to cooperate with Pol Pot.

U.S. inflation rate hits 30 year high

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Consumer prices surged upward another 1 percent in November, pushed by a steep climb in housing and gasoline costs, the government reported today.

The 1 percent jump in the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index represented the 11th consecutive double-digit increase and virtually guaranteed that the nation will finish 1979 with its highest inflation rate in more than 30 years.

Over the first 11 months of the year, consumer prices advanced at a 13.1 percent annual rate — the worst bout of inflation since 1946 when World War II price controls were removed.

The main trouble area last month was in housing, an important sector of the economy. Mortgage interest rates have increased sharply ever since the Federal Reserve Board moved Oct. 6 to severely restrict credit.

Gov't vetoed Ritchie charges

By JAKE BANKY

The attorney-general's ministry has vetoed an RCMP recommendation that charges of influence-peddling be laid against Socred MLA Bill Ritchie and NDP leader Dave Barrett is outraged.

"There should have been no question of interference with the recommendations of police and the Crown counsel," Barrett said.

"If anybody thought that this issue was not that sensitive, then they are exhibiting a level of stupidity that is incredible."

The decision not to lay charges was made by Associate Deputy Attorney-General Neil McDiarmid just three days ago.

He said at the time that Ritchie had been completely cleared of allegations he attempted to use his position as a member of the B.C. Land Commission to bribe a prominent Socred in Central Fraser Valley riding to support his nomination for the last provincial election.

The bribe — according to his accuser, Henry Friesen, — was to have been the release of Friesen's land from the Agricultural Land Reserve.

Barrett drew a parallel between the Ritchie case and former premier W.A.C. Bennett's actions in the Bob Sommers case.

Sommers was finally jailed for accepting a bribe while minister of forests.

"Surely the attorney-general is conscious of the history of this province," he said.

The charges row throws doubt on the chances of Ritchie being appointed to the provincial cabinet.

He has been widely touted as the next minister of tourism.

Barrett sent a letter to the attorney-general Thursday demanding to know why, if Ritchie was cleared, no charge of public mischief is being brought against Friesen.

Attorney-General Allan Williams says he was not consulted before the decision was made but he talked to McDiarmid afterwards and concurred with it.

Asked whether the decision had saved the government some political embarassment Williams replied: "That is not a factor taken into consideration in reaching a decision and was not in this case."

He said it was simply a judgment based on McDiarmid's professional expertise.

McDiarmid said today there should be no confusion.

"It's my professional opinion, based on the evidence available, that there was not a basis for a prima facie case against Mr. Ritchie," he told reporters.

While it is unusual for a Crown counsel's recommen-

Ferries ignoring order

VANCOUVER (CP) — One month after a labor arbitration hearing ordered his reinstatement and 14 months after he was improperly fired, B.C. Ferry Corp. relief master Jerry Stalling exists on depleted savings and bank loans.

Although the ferry corporation has not appealed the arbitration decision ordering his reinstatement, it has neither payed the $30,000 judgment or rehired Stalling as ordered, union officials representing Stalling said Thursday.

After his ferry crashed into the Saltery Bay dock near Powell River last year, he was incorrectly blamed by a secret corporation inquiry whose decision was later overturned by a labor arbitration hearing.

The decision ordered his reinstatement with more than $30,000 in back pay, but so far, Stalling said Thursday, he has heard nothing from the company.

"My last cheque from them was in October (1978) and I'm not getting any unemployment now. I've got loans and I'm waiting," he said. The arbitration hearing ruled as unfounded corporation charges that he was "deceitful and therefore untrustworthy" and that he "lied about circumstance of the collision."

Quebec question 'fraud and joke'

Times News Services

The wording of the Quebec independence referendum next spring was widely condemned across Canada Thursday as unacceptable.

Prime Minister Joe Clark, campaigning in Vancouver, rejected the wording announced earlier in the day by Quebec Premier Rene Levesque and vowed a Progressive Conservative government would not negotiate sovereignty-association.

Clark said sovereignty-association is "incompatible with the idea of a federation and therefore absolutely unacceptable to the federal government.

Liberal leader Pierre Trudeau, highly popular in Quebec, told reporters in Winnipeg he fears for "the rending of the social fabric of Quebec" because the Quebec government now says it would hold a second referendum before leading the province out of Confederation.

"I always said a referendum is divisive by its very nature," Trudeau said. "It pits neighbor against neighbor, father against son."

NDP leader Ed Broadbent, also in Winnipeg, said the question offers Quebecers only two options: independence or the status quo. He said he believes in renewed federalism.

The question is "a complete fraud" that tries to "camouflage" the independence goal of the Parti Quebecois, Quebec Liberal leader Claude Ryan said Thursday.

He said the question should read: "Are you for or against the political independence of Quebec?" Those in favor could then answer a second question on whether or not they wanted to negotiate an economic association with Canada.

"You don't ask for a mandate to negotiate when your mandate to govern is just about expired," said Ryan in referring to the fact that the PQ will soon have to call a provincial election.

"What will this mandate be worth if the government is defeated three months later?"

Ryan added that the PQ is not even asking for direct approval of its sovereignty-association option.

"They are only asking for a mandate to negotiate. Before they had said it would be a mandate to realize (sovereignty) but that has been dropped."

Ryan said the wording of the question may contravene Quebec's referendum law, which makes no allowance for a preamble. Ryan said

Petro-Can share issue to start in July: PCs

OTTAWA (CP) — A Progressive Conservative government would start giving shares in Petro-Canada to the public on July 1 as part of its program to make the national oil company strong enough to compete with foreign-owned oil giants, Energy Ray Hnatyshyn said today.

The government would hand out and sell up to 70 per cent of the shares it now has in Petro-Canada to Canadian citizens and institutions, Hnatyshyn told a news conference called to elaborate on Prime Minister Clark's announcement in Vancouver Thursday.

The prime minister's election campaign announcement said the government would keep the company intact. The government would keep effective control of the company with its 30 per cent of the shares.

But there was some confusion over the issue.

In Vancouver Thursday, Clark said a Progressive Conservative government would retain effective control over Petro-Canada and even expand its mandate.

But, having made that clear in Vancouver, in Winnipeg today Clark said the government will not exercise that control.

The government would retain its one-third holding for some time to maintain the stability of the company. But the holding could well be diminished in the future.

The government could not put all the shares out for sale immediately because the stock market could not absorb that impact.

Hnatyshyn said the government's decision to give five Petro-Canada shares worth $10 each to every citizen was decided on before the the defeat of the Conservative government and the calling of the Feb. 18 election.

International Trade Minister Mike Wilson said 50 per cent of the shares would be given away and the remaining 20 per cent would be offered for sale. Children born by July 1 would be eligible for their shares on their 18th birthday. No person or institution would be allowed to own more than three per cent of the shares.

He said the market value of Petro-Canada shares is about $2.5 billion while the government has invested $927 million in the Calgary-based company. The sale of 20 per cent of the shares would raise more than $500 million for Petro-Canada's budget.

The figures differ slightly from Clark's announcement. He said the goverment would

Rhodesia peace signed

LONDON (UPI) — British and Rhodesian leaders today signed a historic agreement ending a murderous guerrilla war that began seven years ago to the day and promising the African country full independence as the nation of Zimbabwe in early 1980.

British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington said the peace pact gave "new hope" to the people of white-ruled South Africa and Namibia.

Carrington told the black leaders, "In accepting this agreement, you have given the people of Rhodesia and the neighboring countries new hope for the future — that at the end of a bitter conflict lies the prospect of national reconciliation.

"If as a result of this negotiated settlement wounds so deep can be healed, Rhodesia will have given an example and new hope to people in other parts of the world — in particular in Namibia and in South Africa itself."

The bush war that took nearly 30,000 lives began Dec. 21, 1972, with a guerrilla raid on a remote Rhodesian farm.

After more than three months of tough bargaining plagued by repeated crises and deadlocks, the factions signed the documents at noon (4 a.m. PST) in the lofty, chandeliered Long Gallery of London's 150-year-old Lancaster House.

Carrington signed for Britain, Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe, the hard-line nationalists who led the Patriotic Front delegation throughout, signed for their guerrilla supporters, and Prime Minister Bishop Abel Muzorewa signed for the Salisbury delegation.

Former Prime Minister Ian Smith, whose white-supremacy governmment led Rhodesia into a unilateral declaration of independence 14 years ago, did not appear and was represented by Gen. Peter Walls, commander-in-chief of Rhodesia's forces.

To underline the importance Britain attached to the occasion, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher attended

By DR. RAPHAEL PATAI

Following is the second of three articles on the seemingly incomprehensible events in Iran and the Arab world. Patai is the author of The Arab Mind and numerous other books.

The Iranian crisis in recent weeks has diverted attention from the long-simmering antagonism the Arab countries have exhibited toward the West since the end of the Second World War, and more particularly since they achieved independence from the colonial or mandatory rule of England, France and Italy.

There is an oft-quoted Arabic proverb which goes: "I and my cousins against the world, I and my brothers against my cousins, I against my brothers."

This saying, which is also current in a reverse order of its three parts, indicates how fully aware the Arabs themselves are of the propensity to conflict, which is a basic feature of their national character. The proverb itself has been current for centuries, in the course of which the identity of "the world" the Arab was ready to fight against has changed.

Im most cases, the enemy was represented by another Arab country, or, in a wider context, by the non-Arab or non-Moslem "House of War," which surrounded the Arab world in Africa in the south, in Europe in the north and in Asia in the east.

For centuries, the Arabs were successful in battling "the world," until their strength was sapped by the Mongol invasions of the 14th Century. From the 15th, the Arab practically disappeared as an actor from the world stage and, as the German philosopher of history, Oswald Spengler, put it on the eve of the First World War with characteristic Teutonic bluntness, the life of the Arab "fellah peoples" consisted of nothing more than "zoological ups and downs."

From the 15th to the 18th centuries, the banner of Islam was victoriously carried by the Turks, who, however, often exhibited greater harshness towards their fellow Moslem Arabs than toward the Christian West. In any case, the 400 years of Turkish rule were for the Arab world a period of stagnation, of rigid clinging to the customs of the past, of shying away from anything new.

Part of the traditions they basked in and upheld in fond recollection was the contempt the medieval Arab conquerors had for the Christian, the infidel, West.

Then came the rudest of awakenings. The newly industrialized and modernized West knocked on the tightly shut but decaying gates of the Arab world, and not only knocked, but rammed through them. The Arabs were unable to put up more than token resistance. Napoleon's invasion of Egypt in 1798 was followed by the French conquest of Algeria in 1830, of Tunisia in 1881 and Morocco in 1912. England occupied Egypt in 1882 and in 1898 the Sudan came under de facto British control. In 1911, Italy established its rule in Libya.

What remained of the Ottoman Empire's Arab possessions was carved up after the First World War, between France and England, the former receiving mandates over Syria and Lebanon, the latter over Iraq and Palestine.

All this happened without the Arabs being so much as consulted. If they resented, as they bitterly did, being ruled by the Turks (who, while foreigners, at least were Moslems), their reaction to coming under the domination of Europeans, who were not only foreigners but also Christians, that is, "infidels," was one of hatred and rage.

It became clear to all Arabs that the new world against which the united Arab "cousins" must now fight consisted of the European powers which were their new overlords. The extension of the hatred they felt against England, France and Italy to the whole Christian West was psychologically understandable and was facilitated by the old Arab view which held that "Unbelief is one nation," meaning that all the unbelievers (i.e. Christians) constituted one single community, the historical, inevitable enemy of the Arab nation.

This, then, was the Arab world-view in theory. In practice, and this was the most painful and most shameful fact they had to face, the Arabs had to recognize that they were even more powerless to fight the West than they had been to oppose the might of the Sublime Porte.

An Ibn Saud was able to defeat other Arab tribes after the First World War and carve out a huge kingdom from the sands of Arabia, but the Arabs lacked the Short-changed!

Have you ever tried talking your bank into paying going rate of exchange for American coins?

By PAUL MINVIELLE

Money is money, isn't it?

Well, there's the paper money — greenbacks, folding stuff, bills, banknotes. Then there's coin, the stuff we all need to keep parking meters, drink machines and little kids filled and happy.

Then again, there's U.S. money — coins and currency.

So what's the difference? Don't four U.S. quarters get you a dollar?

Sure, but if you're doing your exchanging at a Canadian bank, odds are your four U.S. quarters will get you a Canadian dollar, and maybe, if you've hit the right bank, a bit of the going rate of exchange on U.S. money.

It depends on the bank you're dealing with and if you stamp your feet a little. It's called the squeaky wheel syndrome.

A sneaky survey (our caller didn't identify himself) of bank main branches in Victoria revealed that most banks don't pay a premium on U.S. coins.

The ones that do want the coins rolled and they pay anywhere from 1 to 4 per cent less than the going exchange rate.

The Bank of British Columbia: "We don't pay exchange on silver coin."

What if the coins are wrapped?

"No, sir. We don't pay exchange on that."

Our caller altered tactics somewhat and at the next banks he called, he suggested he had $100 in U.S. coins on hand. Could he get the going exchange rate on the money?

The Bank of Montreal: "If they're all rolled, yes. We'll take them. We pay 1 per cent less than the going rate for cash."

This would have rated as the best deal offered by Victoria banks except for one little hitch: they'll only do it for B of M customers.

Why the discount?

"There's no way we can get rid of it," said the girl on the phone, "so we have to pay a fortune to ship it out. It has to go to Seattle."

It sure isn't standard right across Victoria.

The Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce switchboard operator said she didn't think exchange was paid on coinage. The bank's foreign exchange department agreed.

"We don't separate our coin. The only way you're going to get it (the exchange) is by going to the States. We don't buy coin and we don't separate our coin."

The Toronto-Dominion Bank: "No, we don't (pay exchange). We just don't have any facility for getting rid of it. It's just too costly."

The best deal on U.S. coins that the survey uncovered was at the Royal Bank, although even it leaves a lot to be desired.

"Yes, we pay exchange," said a man in the foreign exchange section. "Right now we pay $112.70." He explained that the bank will pay $112.70 Canadian for $100 in U.S. coinage. Properly wrapped, of course.

The same amount in U.S. funds will get you the current exchange rate, about $1.16 Canadian for every $1 U.S.

Why the difference?

"I suppose it's due to the handling needed with coins," he said.

There doesn't appear to be any rules controlling the banks on the matter so you just have to shop around for the best deal.

TOWN TALK

When he was mayor of Oak Bay, Brian Smith was a vocal exponent of more provincial aid for education costs.

Now that he's education minister, he's holding the line on government spending.

Has he changed his mind?

"No, I've changed my job," he says.

What he did before, Smith said, was the job of a mayor.

"But the job of a minister of education is to deal with the needs of the entire province."

Hmmmm.

That gutter and curb work on Southgate at the northeast corner of the park doesn't involve park land, a spokesman for the city engineering department assures Town Talk.

He was replying to complaints that the road work is alienating park land.

Park lovers apparently shout first and investigate second.

"It's a job that should have been done years ago," the engineering spokesman says. "It involves a couple of feet of roadside property."

He said the gutter will improve drainage and the curb will stop cars from parking on the grass in the park.

School choirs have been signing Christmas carols in the lobby of city hall all this week, and almost everyone seems to enjoy it.

Almost everyone, that is. One person phoned up Thursday, complaining about all the noise booming out of Centennial Square.

Officials note with satisfaction that this particular grinch lives in Oak Bay.

Still on the Christmas kick, those sweet sounds of Christmas floating across the Inner Harbor this week came from a pair of tinselled-up charter boats, in a marine version of old English carolling.

The carol-singing crews under afterdeck canopies, aided by recorded music, were organized as a gesture of goodwill by Brady-Lee Charters.

The letter from the little girl to Santa read: "All I want for Christmas is don't upset me."

Strange the way kids put things, thought reporter Paul Minvielle as he included the snippet in his Wednesday story on letters addressed to the North Pole that end up at the Vancouver Post Office.

Deskman Gordie Forbes thought it was kind of funny too, putting the quote into a headline.

That evening, Jason Minvielle, 10, read the story.

"That's a dumb game," he commented. "Yeah," agreed Robert, 11.

"What's a dumb game?" their Dad asked.

The meaning of Christmas — or the feeling, rather — unfolds in sundry and curious ways.

"Hey dad! I found a dollar!"

He handed over a rumpled $20 bill.

Temptation tugged dad toward the door. Into the parking lot. There, a fortyish man dangling an unlit cigarette from his lips shuffled distractedly in and around the stalls, scouring the nightsoaked pavement with downturned eyes.

"Lose something?"

"Twenty dollars."

"Here . . . thank the four-year-old . . ."

It's not always easy being a dad.

On Oct. 18 he was at McDonald's on Pandora Avenue. He left his four-year-old German Shepherd Pango and his two-year-old Doberman Cleo in his car.

He came out to find Cleo missing and was told by a couple in another car they had seen a man in a gold Honda Civic take Cleo and drive away.

Since then, he's spotted 174 gold Honda Civics around town and checked out every owner with the help of the Motor-Vehicle Branch — at a cost of 25 cents each.

Renaud has run advertisements in newspapers and on radio, without success.

As a final resort, he now has had flyers printed with three pictures of his missing pet and is distributing them around town.

He describes Cleo as being black with brown markings. Her tail is clipped but her ears are floppy.

Renaud says she was probably easy to hijack because she is very friendly.

If you know where she is give Renaud a ring at 381-0525 or 385-9113.

Man stabbed in chest

City police said Guillermo Gomez was walking home with his wife Susan, 18, shortly after midnight when a man bumped into them.

Police said the man, who appeared to be drunk, became belligerent and pulled a knife.

Gomez went home and was later taken to hospital where he is in good condition.

New unit urged for street drunks

City police and hospital officials say there should be some other facility besides police cells to hold persons arrested for being drunk in a public place.

Deputy Chief Jim Smith said that while police have always been charged with the responsibility of picking up sreet drunks, officers are ill-equipped to handle problems that may arise.

He said police have neither the time, the expertise nor the facilities to look after drunks and because of that, their care and custody should be given to someone else.

"I think maybe there is a need for another kind of care than detaining the person in a cell until he sobers up," he said.

CARLOW
. . . 'always a risk'

Their comments came after an incident earlier this week in which a man who fell out of his bunk in the police lockup was subsequently found to have suffered a concussion.

Edward McGibbon, 62, was treated at Victoria General Hospital Monday night for a cut to his head and then taken back to his cell.

McGibbon, arrested for being drunk in a public place, was released from custody the following afternoon when a bed was found for him at the Cool-Aid hostel on Fernwood.

Shortly after he arrived at the hostel, workers noticed he appeared ill and took him to hospital where his concussion was diagnosed.

He remains in hospital in satisfactory condition.

Carlow said there was nothing inappropriate with the treatment McGibbon received when he was first brought to hospital.

"There is always a risk in discharging a person who has suffered a blow to the head," he said.

"But I'm satisfied the (emergency room) doctor made a correct decision."

Using police cells is at best a stop-gap measure, he said.

Deputy Smith said 100 or more drunks are picked up monthly in the city. While the law no longer makes being drunk an offence, police have the authority to keep those arrested overnight or until they sober up.

Smith said the detoxification centre on McClure Street is the only alternative but it can't cope with "out-and-out drunks."

New city rink ready to roll

Denise Heinekey brought rented roller skates to Victoria and made them a going concern last summer.

The disco roller rink will open Boxing Day at 966 Yates, once the site of a bowling alley and lately an auction house.

The last roller palace here closed in the 1950s, became a warehouse and is now a building supply outlet on Douglas.

Heinekey, 30, borrowed $60,000 on the strength of her inventory of 200 pairs of rental skates, and with help from her friends saved $20,000 on materials by recycling wood from the auction house to renovate the building.

Nearly 7,000 square feet of floor is coated with polyurethane plastic, the same material used for wheels on skateboards and indoor-outdoor roller skates.

Heinekey says the plastic finish is resilient, non-skid and less likely to cause abrasions in falls.

The building has new lighting, a sound system and murals painted by some well-known illustrators.

Boys try for purse

Two 14-year-old boys will get a visit from city police in connection with an attempted purse-snatching on Alder Street near Reed Thursday afternoon.

Police said Phyllis Ellwell was walking to her home at 3170 Alder at 3:50 p.m. when two youths grabbed her and tried to wrestle her purse out of her arm.

The woman held on and the youths fled.

However, an unidentified woman witnessed the attack and gave police the address of a nearby house the youths entered.

New plan for old theatre

Plans are in the works to replace the Capitol Theatre at Blanshard and Yates with a multi-cinema development.

"We're discussing it. It's looking closer than it ever has," Jack Tomik, district manager of Famous Players Ltd. in Vancouver said today.

He was asked to comment on reports in the city that the theatre is to be demolished by Jan. 31.

"The company has had some drawings made of the new project and that's about where it's sitting now," he said.

Early in the new year the board of directors of Famous Players will make a decision on the project, Tomik added.

The local theatre manager said Thursday there have been plans going back as far as 1949 for redevelopment of the theatre, a red brick structure which was built in 1920.

The last major plan was for an office-apartment block in 1973.

Christmas cut for 17 pilots

West Coast Air Services Ltd. has laid off 17 pilots — almost half its force — as an economic measure, the company said today.

Company president Al Michaud said the layoff was due to poor economic conditions.

He said the company normally lays off a few pilots over the winter but this is the highest total in recent years.

The company retains 21 pilots on staff.

Michaud said the layoff is not related in any way to a bid by Airwest Airlines to buy the firm. Airwest has also laid off a couple of pilots as part of its normal winter pattern.

Michaud said the pilots have been informed they will be considered for re-hiring if economic conditions improve in the spring.

The proposed purchase of West Coast must be approved by the air transport committee of the Canadian Transportation Commission before it can proceed.

The Jim Pattison Group is offering to buy up a large number of coastal air services and plans to merge them into one company. Its purchase of Airwest has already been approved.

Surplus hoarding hit

Victoria NDP MLA Gordon Hanson said Thursday the provincial government should spend part of its surplus to relieve the emergency situation at Royal Jubilee Hospital.

Hanson said a lack of acute-care beds has left 1,200 people waiting for surgery and some of the cases are serious.

He says the callousness of the government is beyond belief when it reports a surplus of $188 million for the first six months of the fiscal year and does not provide funds to alleviate the serious problem at RJH.

CAMOSUN COLLEGE

Directory of 1979-80 Community Evening Courses

NEW AND CONTINUING COURSES

PLEASE RETAIN FOR FUTURE REFERENCE

Something for Everyone!

Community Education Services Registration Information

Registration

Registrations will be accepted, if space is available, as detailed below. While some courses commence January 7, 1980, the majority will be starting one week later, the week of January 14, 1980. Pre-register to ensure a place in the course of your choice.

On Campus: Registrations are accepted at Camosun College, Ewing Building, Lansdowne at Richmond Rd., Monday through Friday from 08:30 to 16:30.

By Mail: Complete coupon and send with your fee to Community Education Services, Camosun College, 1950 Lansdowne Rd., Victoria, B.C. V8P 5J2 or a letter giving the same information—name, address, telephone number, course, fee, evening. Please do not enclose cash.

At the School: Registrations will be accepted at the school on the evening the course opens, if space is available. But to avoid disappointment, we advise you to register in advance of the course starting date. WE REGRET THAT WE ARE UNABLE TO ACCEPT REGISTRATIONS BY TELEPHONE.

Fees

Course fees must accompany application. Applications are accepted in order received and persons are admitted to classes only after full fees have been paid. Make cheque or money order payable to Camosun College. PLEASE DO NOT ENCLOSE CASH. TUITION FEES OF $25. OR OVER ARE DEDUCTIBLE FOR TAX PURPOSES.

General Information

Assistance will be provided in selecting a choice of course. Please telephone (592-1281) or call in person.

Cancellations

Courses are subject to cancellation for inadequate enrolment or other cause. Classes may be postponed when inclement weather conditions prevail.

Holidays

No classes will be held on statutory holidays.

Refunds and Transfers

Requests for refunds or transfers MUST BE RECEIVED IN WRITING OR IN PERSON AT THE C.E.S. REGISTRATION DESK BEFORE THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE SECOND SESSION OF THE COURSE.
An administrative fee of $3.00 will be charged for courses not yet started and $5.00 after the first session of the course. No refunds will be granted after the start of the second session.
Students registered in classes which are subsequently cancelled by the College will receive a full refund. This policy will apply on all courses unless otherwise noted in the course detail.

Senior Citizens

Unless otherwise specified in the course detail, Community Education courses other than vocational, upgrading, or contract courses, are available to senior citizens at half the normal fee. The discount is available only at the time of registration, upon presentation of a B.C. Pharmacare card.

Equipment and Supplies

Common tools and equipment normally supplied by the school may be used by the evening course students. However, specialized tools, materials, books, etc. must be supplied by the student unless otherwise noted.

Wanted

If you are interested in a course not now included in the program or if you have adequate knowledge or experience to instruct in any appropriate subject, please call Community Education Services.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE TRAINING (No Refund, No ½-Fee) Beryl Tonkin, Chairperson

Canadian Citizens and Landed Immigrants

Courses for adults are offered in English as a Second Language to assist Canadian Citizens and Landed Immigrants who cannot speak or read English, and to encourage others to improve their ability to speak and write the language. Students will be directed into the class which best fits their level of English. All students are assessed in the first lesson. Textbooks are available at cost.

Programs are offered as follows:

Day Classes at Tolmie Campus

1) 3 mornings a week of 3 hours each: 9:00 a.m. - 12:00 noon (90 hours)
2) Classes of absolute beginners will be given in the afternoons on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday from 12:30 p.m. - 3:30 p.m. each day (90 hours).
3) Subject to testing results, an advanced level class will meet on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday from 9:00 a.m. - 12:00 noon (120 hours).

Evening Classes at S.J. Willis Junior Secondary

4) 4 evenings a week (Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday) from 7:30 p.m. - 9:30 p.m. each evening (80 hours).
5) 2 evenings a week (Monday and Thursday) from 7:30 p.m. - 9:30 p.m. each evening (80 hours, September - March).

All classes begin on Monday, January 7, 1980 and end in the week ending March 14, 1980.
The fee for all courses is $20.00.
New students are asked to register on Mondays only after the first week of classes, i.e. after Monday, January 14.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE TRAINING (No ½-Fee) Beryl Tonkin, Chairperson
Visitor Visa Students (No Refunds After the End of the 2nd Week of Classes)

Courses in English as a Second Language will be offered to adult visitors who wish to improve their skills in speaking and writing English. Students will be assessed and directed to classes at the appropriate level. Textbooks are available at cost.
Programs are offered at the same locations and at the same times indicated above.
All classes begin on Monday, January 7, 1980 and end in the week ending March 14, 1980.
Fees for these courses are as follows:

COLLEGE CALENDAR UP-DATE

The purpose of this page is to provide information that is supplementary to the current college calendar. For details on the courses listed below, please refer to the 79/80 calendar.

ENGLISH PLACEMENT TEST
The College recommends that every student planning to take a college or university level English course take the English Placement Test. The Test provides excellent information for the purpose of advising students as to which courses are most appropriate.

July 1 — evenings at community colleges

Enquire at the Counselling/Admissions Center for details as to time and place. Students who do one of these official sittings will receive a transcript that is recognized by all post-secondary institutions in B.C.

G.E.D. (General Educational Development Tests)
Successful completion of the G.E.D. Tests will provide the person who hasn't completed grade 12 with a certificate of highschool equivalency.

Applicants must be at least 19 years of age, have been out of school one full year, and a B.C. resident for 6 months. The examination fee is $5.00.

The 5 exams are written at the Carey Road Campus from 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. on the following dates: January 2, February 16, March 15, April 19, May 25, June 14.

CAMOSUN
YOUR COMMUNITY COLLEGE

Welcome to School Districts

We would like to take this opportunity to welcome School Districts #62, 63, and 64 as part of Camosun College's expanded region.

With these districts, in addition to #61, Camosun now has the mandate of providing educational services and opportunities to all of southern Vancouver Island.

We look forward to working with these four school districts in ensuring that the learning needs of all communities are met. The present College Board has recommended to the Ministry of Education, Science, and Technology that the new Board comprise two representatives of District 61, one representative for each of Districts 62, 63, and 64, and four Ministry appointees. The appointment of the new College Board members is expected in early 1980.

As a member of the community, you have an interest in your community's college. You can influence its direction by making your questions, concerns, recommendations, or requests for additional services known to:

Lloyd Morin, Principal
Linda Wiebe, Information Officer
Administrative Council members:
Alan Batey, Director of Community Education Services
Jans Diemer, Director of Science and Technology
Lou Dryden, Director of Support Services
Patrick Floyd, Director of Liberal and Applied Arts
Alan Fraser, Director of Student Services
Jim Greenwood, Acting Director of Trades Training
Beryl Hastings, Bursar
Brian Killip, Acting Director of Business Programs
Joy Vernon, Director of Health and Human Services.

Camosun Services

- Career training and upgrading in applied arts, business, health and service occupations, technologies, trades.
- Education and career guidance and counselling for adults or young people, who may or may not attend Camosun.
- Preparatory education for adults who never completed secondary school or who lack specific knowledge or skills required for more advanced study.
- Academic education for adults wishing to expand their knowledge in humanities, social sciences, language, economics, sciences—with the opportunity for transfer to upper level courses at university.
- Personal development and leisure education.

Camosun College Students

Students vary in age from 16 to over 70 years. In credit programs, 30% are over 25 years old; more than half have been out of school for more than a year. Many return after 5 or more years out of school. The largest number are between 18 and 24 years.

During one full year, more than 20,000 people in the community make use of Camosun's programs and services—almost four fifths participate on a part-time basis.

Camosun College Programs

- Community response workshops, seminars, short courses;
- Preparatory and adult basic education;
- University transfer - arts, business, pre-professional, sciences;
- Career programs

Camosun College Instructors

In 1 semester, there are approximately:

- 200 full-time faculty
- 70 part-time faculty
- 380 part-time instructors involved in the delivery of Community Education courses
- many resource people who visit the College by invitation

"Career training" instructors have journeyman certificates or other specialist licenses and qualifications; "academic" instructors have master's or doctorate degrees. Most have practical, professional experience as trades people, technologists, service workers, business people—and successful experience in teaching.

SATURDAY
A.M. Network

2:00 p.m. The Metropolitan Opera — Live from the Lincoln Center in New York: Aufsteig un Fall der Stadt Mahagonny (Rise and Fall of the City of Mahagonny), Kurt Weill (libretto by Brecht). A bold portrayal of the hypocrisy, corruption and decadence of modern materialism, as evidenced in the disintegration of the fictional society of Mahagonny, Alabama, where morality and ethics are unimportant, and everything is pardonable except the lack of money.

11:05 p.m. Music from the Shows — Colin Maclean with music from Royalty in the Movies — the glory of the court including cuts from Richard III, Julius Caesar, Camelot, The Lion in Winter, The King and I, and more.

F.M. Network

7:05 p.m. Audience — Christmas Eve: A story by Maeve Brennan. Also, A Christmas Anthology: Words and music for the festive season, ranging over ten centuries. And a special feature of the Year of the Child section on childhood Christmases remembered by Canadians in the past century.

9:05 p.m. International Concert — Host: Harry Mannis. Featuring the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Herbert Von Karajan; Vienna Philharmonic orchestra, conducted by Dohnany.

SUNDAY

HOMES TODAY

How much home can you afford?

INSIDE:

- The raising of 2604 Roseberry. Page 6.
- Computerized houses. Page 5.
- Homescene — Cliff Swan. Page 2.

How can you decide from the asking price of a house, whether you would be able to afford to live in it or not? You have some cash to put down, but what about the rest of the money?

Most buyers establish a general idea in what price range to look for a home based on what monthly payments they feel they can afford.

This is influenced by many factors, one of which is desired lifestyle. If a couple spend thousands of dollars each winter to bask for on some tropical beach, if they enjoy dining out a couple of nights a week, or if they like expensive cars and clothes, then their ability to meet monthly payments will be affected.

Any realtor will have an ammortization book which tells at a glance what the monthly payments would be on a given mortgage at a given interest rate for a given number of years.

For example, a $50,000 mortgage, over a twenty five year period, at 13¾%, would cost $577.97 per month. A $30,000 mortgage, over the same period, at the same interest rate, would require monthly payments of $346.78.

Quick multiplication will show that, on the $50,000 mortgage, the total amount paid, not including taxes, and providing the interest rates stayed the same, would be $173,391. The total amount paid on the $30,000 mortgage would be $104,034.

This seems like a lot of money, until you consider that, since one has to live somewhere, rent would have to be paid if one were not buying a home, so that the money would be going out anyway. Of course, as Wayne Butterfield, a realtor at National Trust's main office in Victoria says, due to the inflationary factor, rents continue to increase, so in fact, one would eventually pay out more than these figures.

He points out that the inflationary factor applies to interest rates as well as to rents; they could go up too, so the total payment figures given could be higher. But if this happens, so do property values; therefor, when you are finished paying for your home throughout an inflationary period, your property is worth a lot more more than the figure you bought it for, so that you are much further ahead to buy than to rent, even when home prices and mortgage rates are at an all-time high.

In general most real estate brokers and lending institutions agree that mortgage payments and property taxes should normally not exceed 30 per cent of the family's gross income.

To decide your household gross income, add the income of the prime wage earner, the second wage earner, bank interest, dividends from stocks and bonds, and any other annual interest or income.

The three main variable factors are the mortgage rate, property taxes and your net family income after fixed expenses (car payments, bank loans, etc.) are deducted.

Remember that you must add taxes to these annual charges. A capable real estate salesperson can provide you with the latest property tax information on any home you inspect.

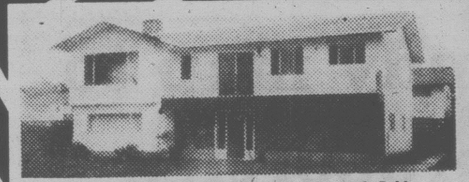

Lending institutions such as banks will decide whether you qualify for a mortgage and for how much based on your annual income. Before receiving a mortgage, you will require verification of your annual earnings either through a letter from your employer or a copy of your income tax return. Also you need to have established an acceptable prior credit rating.

CLIFF SWAN CHANGING A LIGHT BULB in his Japanese garden lamp at 858 Old Esquimalt Road. The lamp was a gift from his son-in-law, who got it from a friend in Vancouver. Nobody seemed to know what to do with it, until Cliff got hold of it. He put it on a rock base and wired it for electricity; no-one knows how old it is, or whether it originally came from Japan.

Cliff was born in Spokane City, in the West Kootenays, which is, despite its name, a village about fifty miles north of Nelson. He worked at Cominco in Kimberley, and was a carpenter/foreman when he retired in 1964. He and his wife Hazel Mae came to Victoria to live in 1966 because their daughter and her family live here.

Why Satellite Street?

Satellite Street in Oak Bay was named for H.M.S. Satellite, a screw corvette of 1,462 tons and 21 guns which was based at the Esquimalt station from 1857 to 1860 under command of Captain James Provost.

In addition to the Oak Bay street, the corvette's name has also been given to Satellite Pass in Barkley Sound, Satellite Reef in Nanaimo harbour and Satellite Channel which separates the north end of the Saanich Peninsula from Salt Spring Island.

VANCOUVER VICTORIA COURTENAY

Soon we'll all live in computerized houses

It was inevitable in our current age of the computer. A computerized house is now being developed. You may be living in one in the future.

One of the unique features in the new house is a special computer program that co-ordinates and controls the home's heating and cooling system.

However, before the computer programming takes place, the resident family will be interviewed. It will be noted what time they drag out of bed in the morning and retire at night.

They will be asked what time breakfast preparation is started and when the breakfast dishes are cleared away. Also when the breadwinner(s) leave for work and the kids split for school.

It must be known when the youngsters return from school and when the weary workers return to home base. It's even noted when the TV is usually turned off and family members migrate from living room to bedroom areas.

All this and other input is fed into a computer, which in turn faithfully controls heating and cooling of the home — achieving maximum efficiency and energy conservation.

For example, during winter months the temperature in the home is automatically lowered to a predetermined level after the family retires.

In the morning, the bedroom area is warmed first, ready for the inhabitants when they bounce out of bed. Then the kitchen is warmed.

When the family departs for their daily activities, the temperature is lowered. But when they return in the afternoon, their home will be comfortably warm, thanks to their ever-diligent computer friend.

The project is a spin-off from the space program. The space-age structure is called the Technology Utilization House — or Tech House, for short.

Another particularly interesting aspect of this "home of the future" is its security system.

This system even protects its occupants before they reach the house (as they approach the entrance). They carry a penlight device that will signal a bright light to illuminate the outside entrance area at least 30 feet before they reach that point.

Inside the home, every area is monitored by the ever-present security system, which includes a touch-sensitive under-the-carpet alarm system.

A burglar doesn't have a chance in this home. Even if he manages to evade the separate alarm system in the yard, he'll trigger the system with his first step inside the home.

If no occupant is home at the time, the intrusion will be automatically signaled at the local police station.

The system goes much farther than that. It even includes a "tornado detector" that sounds an alarm when a television camera picks up the view of an oncoming twister.This would not be applicable in Victoria, but maybe we could have built-in earthquake detectors when computer homes become available here.

COMPARING THE PHOTO of the way the house looks now with the inset photo which shows how it looked before, one can see where the original shingles end, and where new (unpainted) ones have been put on. Owner intends to cover new aluminum windows with wooden window frames to match those on the house. The house lifted free and clear from its foundation, since it was simply resting on it, attached only by the chimney. New houses are bolted to the foundation, but older homes were not. Holes were punched through the chimney bricks, and it broke at that point. Chimney stayed intact above the break, was re-built below it.

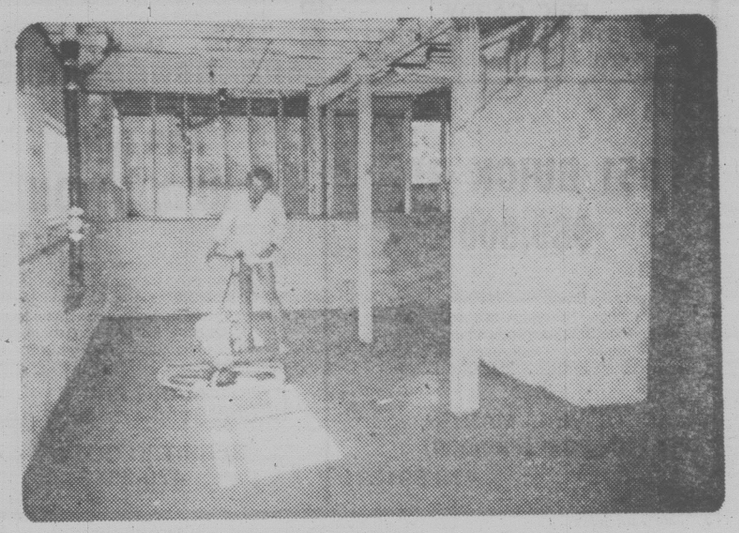

TAYLOR HOUSE MOVING, who did the job, uses 12" steel beams, which go under the house, through windows where possible, through holes punched in walls where not. Four synchronized hydraulic jacks lifted the house, supported on these beams. Nothing was taken out of it. China from one cabinet was removed and placed on the floor, but nothing was broken. A few very minor ceiling cracks were all.

The raising of 2604 Roseberry

The house was built in 1910. It's a big house, with staircase to the second floor and wood paneling in most rooms.

There's a tiny dark-panelled room with a fireplace just off the entry hall, presumably originally used as a waiting room (for gentleman callers, perhaps ?). In the parlor, as one might expect, is a wind-up gramaphone. But....wait. Not just one wind-up gramaphone, but several. And a music box, with interchangeable metal discs, and a juke box, and lamps from the 1920's, and....well, this is the reason that Don Mayer needed to raise his house.

His wife, Karen, could just barely manage to stand in the 5' 8" space under the house, and Don could stand if he stooped. Definitely not enough head room to work on and play with their collection of nostalgia in general and gramaphones in particular. And, being the avid collectors they are, they are always looking for a new (old) gramaphone.

They decided to make the basement useable, by raising the house. Steve Pierce, of Taylor House Moving, says the cost of jacking up a house ready to put a basement under it, ranges between $900 and $1200. It costs, he says, about $3,000 to put in a foundation if none exists, so that for $5,000 or $6,000, one could double the floor area of an average house. This gives you an un-finished basement, as one would find in a new house.

ABOVE PHOTO WAS TAKEN BEFORE JOB WAS STARTED. House sat on a cement foundation, but had no cement floor. Ceiling height down there was 5' 8". Note how porch is supported on stone pillars.

HOUSE HAS NOW BEEN JACKED UP about three feet, so that ceiling height, when pipes are covered, will be about eight feet. Porch is being supported temporarily, and is now three feet above the stone pillars.

NEW STEPS HAVE BEEN BUILT and walls have been filled in. The completed job will cost in the neighborhood of $8,000. Don Mayer is doing a lot of the finishing himself, which saves a considerable amount. Now the wind-up gramaphones have a new show-room, and there'll be a work-shop so that all the by-gones Don collects can be repaired and refurbished.

Nailing into plaster walls, faulty ground, basement leak

By A. J. HAND

Q. — We are moving into an all brick Tudor house with plaster walls. My husband is of the impression that if we put up Sanitas or Wall-Tex on the walls, the walls would be ruined and that the covering could never be removed for repapering or painting. He also feels that you cannot put nails into plaster walls for hanging pictures. Is he right? — R.B., Holbrook, N.Y.

A. — No, he is wrong. Any kind of wallpaper can be removed although the types you describe require a bit more work than plain papers.

As for nailing into plaster, no problem. Sometimes the wall will chip a bit when the nail is started, but not if you drive the nail through a piece of tape pressed firmly over the spot you wish to nail into.

Q. — My electrical system has always been grounded via a cable leading to a water pipe. Recently I replaced some of the old metal plumbing in my home with plastic pipe. It now occurs to me that since the plastic won't conduct electricity, my ground may no longer be effective. Is that possible? — W.F., Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

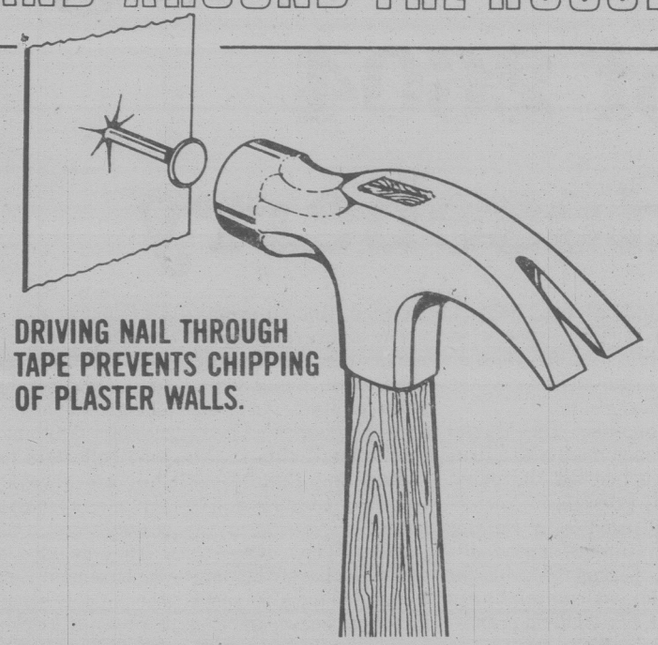

A: — It depends upon where the plastic is in relation to the grounding cable. If the plastic is between the cable connection and the point where the pipe runs into the earth outside your home, the ground is indeed no longer effective.

If that's the case, you should have an electrician come out and remedy the situation.

Q. — We get water in our cellar whenever it rains, sometimes as deep as a foot. What would be the proper way to prevent the water from leaking in, and what do you think about a sump pump? — A.L., Providence, R.I.

A. — I'd have to know just how the water is getting in before I could come up with a specific fix. Suggest you go to the library and check out the article on wet basements featured in the September 1972 issue of Popular Science. I think sump pumps are a good idea. They don't really solve the leaking, but they do eliminate the water. And if the problem is severe — as yours is — pump is often cheaper than the type of repair that may be necessary.

HAND AROUND THE HOUSE

DRIVING NAIL THROUGH TAPE PREVENTS CHIPPING OF PLASTER WALLS.

Why did they call it Yale Street?

Yale Street, in Oak Bay, was named for James Murray Yale, a chief factor of The Hudson's Bay Company in pioneer days. Yale was born in Montreal in 1796, and travelled extensively in the wilderness of the vast Northwest. He established Colville House in The Peace River and was in charge of Fort Langley on the mainland.

He retired to Victoria in 1860, and bought land near Royal Oak, which he called Stromness Farm, and where he died in 1871.

Wallpaper floors and put fabric on walls

One of the best ways to make a routinely constructed apartment stand out from the rest is to do the unusual and the unexpected. This calls for some imagination.

Utilizing a decorative material in another context can create a dramatic effect. Take wallpaper, for example. There are no rules that state it must be used only on walls.

Actually, wallpaper can make a highly effective floor covering. Lay it on the floor of the kitchen, study, bathroom or children's room and then top it off with a strong clear polyurethane which will give many years of wear.

Another idea might be to cover the walls and the floor in the same design to create a dramatic, total effect. You also can mix and match using one wallpaper on the walls and a contrasting pattern on the floor.

Not only does the usage of wallpaper on the floor create an interesting look, it is practical as well.

The plastic flooring which protects the wallpaper can be cared for by sweeping and occasional damp mopping. The clarity of the plastic covering allows the wallpaper color and design you select to show through. The rich texture of the wallpaper topped with the plastic gives the room a carpeted look. It is something you can do yourself at little cost. One hint: don't select a "non-directional" pattern.

Just as wallpaper can appear on the floor of your apartment or condominium, so can fabric move from the more traditional role as drapery, upholstery and bedspread material to that of wall covering.

Storey-and-a-half with four bedrooms!

Here's a very impressive traditional design which is reminiscent of the more luxurious ranch houses of the Old West. A low and wide exterior with three dormer windows, stone veneer and horizontal channel siding finish and heavy shake roof. The facade requires only a verandah complete with rocking chairs to be the complete ranch house.

The overwhelming sense of spaciousness of the interior layout is so strong that it becomes a luxury feature in itself.

The double-doored entry opens directly into a reception hall and faces the staircase or leads left into the large formal living room. The living room features a wide, raised-hearth masonry fireplace with built-in log storage bin and the barbeque feature on the patio side.

Swinging doors from the main hall lead into the enormous family room/lounge/dinette combination, which provides an excellent rear view, and access via sliding glass doors to the dining patio. A U-shaped kitchen with an excellent work triangle and vast countertop work surface separates from the dinette via grill-top range and convenient snack bar counter.

A space-saving pocket door provides ready access to the large front-facing formal dining room. The kitchen position is ideal for maximum separation of formal dining when entertaining and more relaxed family meals.

A very large laundry-utility room and storage area, featuring a side-by-side configuration of washer-tub-dryer, separates from the kitchen and two-piece vanity bath via pocket door.

The upstairs appointments are even more luxurious; four large bedrooms, walk-in closets, a den, dormer alcoves and a very large central bathroom.

All four bedrooms are large and airy; two with interesting dormer and two with walk-in closets. The enormous master has a three-piece ensuite with shower, and the second bedroom has a private vanity sink.

The den area offers a wide range of decor interpretations — best would be a study/den for Dad and older students, or a comfortable hideaway for the parents of "active" youngsters.

This design is a modern version of the home which grew with North America — a home which a family can grow into through the years.

Plans for design No. 75-2876 may be purchased either by the single set, at a cost of $85.00 for the first set and $14.00 for each additional set, or by the package. A five-set plan package, including the first set, is economically priced at $120.00 and an eight-set package, also including the first set, is only $150.00.

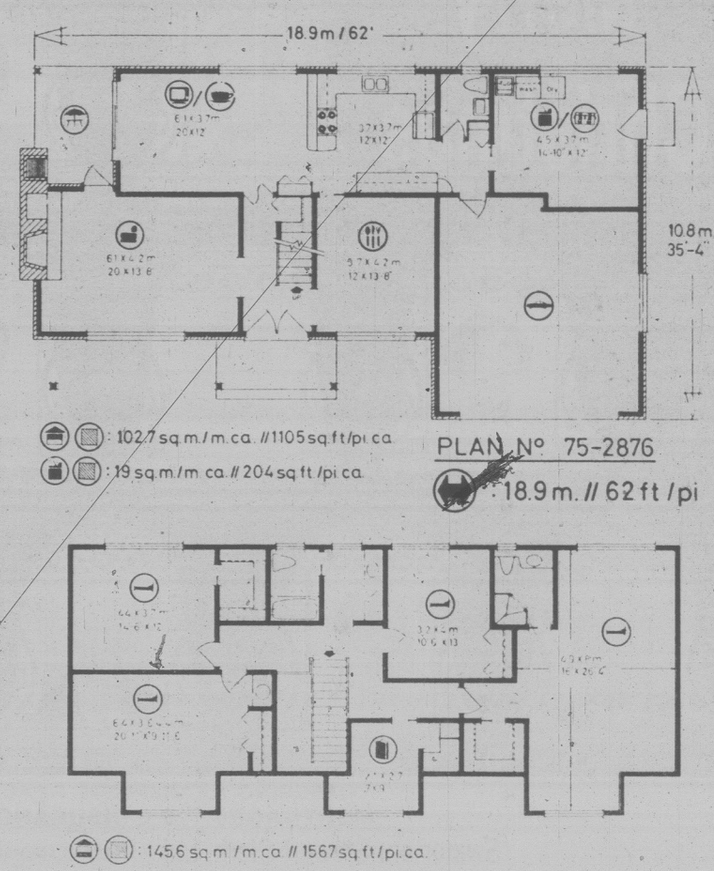

Whichever method you choose, please include $5.00 for postage and handling. B.C. residents add 4% sales tax.

Season's Greetings

Festive bells

Bells of this Festive Season ring out as they have for centuries. They call our thoughts to family and friends, to hearth and home, to Christmas joy, the New Year and a new decade. Their peals remind us to be everlastingly grateful that we live in this bountiful Canada as free men and women — favoured as few are in the World. Freedom does not happen; it is built by citizens with high ideals, devoting themselves with wisdom, determination, vigilance and often self sacrifice. Keep the bells ringing!
